

Gain by Court Fight Claimed

Highest Tribunal Makes Liberal Decisions Due to Squabble, Says

A happy and friendly discussion, Stephen T. Early, the president's secretary, was at pains to inform the press the Nebraska had been received as the result of a request from Garner.

In support of his contention that the controversy over the court bill had brought a new trend in supreme court decisions, Mr. Roosevelt's spokesman cited three decisions announced by the high tribunal since February 5, when the court bill was proposed.

Social Security Decision Is Cited

The decision on the social security act, he said, reversed a narrow conception of the federal spending power enunciated in the prior decision invalidating the agricultural adjustment act.

The decision upholding the Wagner labor relations act, he added, reversed last year's decision of the Guffey coal act and greatly broadened the power of congress in the field of commerce.

Lastly, he cited the decision upholding the Washington minimum wage law as reversing the decision of a year ago on a similar New York law and entailing a new conception of the due process clause as applied to the states.

The spokesman said that during the Coolidge and Hoover administrations, the court began a series of decisions "which were more legislative than judicial."

"Something had to be done," he added, "and the result was the message to congress (proposing the president's court bill). And it's rather interesting that a large part of that objective, but 'the country still wants insurance of the continuity of that objective and a better mechanism for the administration of maximum justice in a minimum of time.'"

"There has been another great gain in that the country is not only court conscious but constitution-minded, which is a tremendous factor, and understands that the constitution is not intended to block social and economic reforms through court legislation."

Thieves Trade Pigs But Victim Doesn't Like it; Those Left Are Females

Thieves this week stole three male sucklings from W. H. Raynor's six-pig litter but when they left, there were still six pigs in the litter, the Halls Ferry farmer complained to Sheriff A. C. Burk yesterday.

The trouble, Raynor said, was that the three animals the thieves substituted were sow-pigs, which he didn't want. He valued the stolen pigs at $5 each.
