Style-Smiles - - - by Gretchen

"Never mind looking, dear. It was here in my bag all the time!" A fine time to tell him! But, sincerely now, it's a fine time to tell you to get this type of evening gown if you've danced out your supply, for it will lend its welcome variety next winter. Pastel pink chiffon with flowing skirt, its up-in-front and longer-in-back hickie is marked strongly as a coming style trend. Deep horizontal tucks further distinguish it and purple and wine flowers add character as well as contrast.—Copyright 1937, Esquire Features, Inc.

Cobblers Made by Experts Vary in Shape, Filling

Whether you belong to the school of cobbler makers who believe that this old-time favorite must have a bottom crust, or are among the more daring modernists who insist that a bottomless pudding is far superior; you'll like to recall the All-American favorite and include an occasional one on summer menus.

Of course there are apples, the faultless filling, but also there are peaches, berries, apricots and later huckleberry cobblers that are lip smacking delights, fit for the most fastidious dessert eaters.

Just as clothes make the man, so do crusts make the cobbler, and a biscuit dough seems most popular. Just a good rich biscuit, maybe with an egg for flavor, cut in the shape you're fonder of. One daring modernist adds cheese to her crust.

Some good cooks cut the crust in strips and lay it lattice style, others criss-cross it, twisting each strip just a little as it's laid down. Still other cobbler experts make a solid crust and yet others cut them biscuit shapes and lay them close together to completely cover the top of the fruit.

I even know a cook who cuts doughnut shaped pieces of crust and centers each with a cherry.

Then there's the question of how deep. That again brings up personal tastes. Many cobbler makers claim it's a deep dish pie if anything deeper than a pie pan is used. While others insist that the dessert should be at least two-thirds fruit sauce, thereby calling for a deeper container.

So if your family hasn't any traditions or preferences on the subject, just go into a sort of cobbler trance and make some. This is a grand season to specialize in fruit desserts.

Asparagus makes a colorful company salad when served with pimiento dressing, but first make sure your guests appreciate the flavor of the pimiento. To a clear French dressing simply add one whole pimiento, chopped fine, or more if you like. Pour over the asparagus stalks that have been arranged on lettuce leaves.

String beans and carrots make a combination that is a favorite in some households. The flavors are very good in combination, and the contrasting colors make an attractive vegetable dish. Young carrots appear on summer tables in a casserole dish too.

Put in a casserole with a few breadcrumbs and some cheese, alternating the layers. Pour a medium cream sauce over the top and add a few more breadcrumbs and cheese. Price Back From Buying Trip East

Home from a trip to New York to select fall merchandise, O. E. Price, Salem merchant, was in his store Monday. The weather was terrifically hot, he reported, hot enough to "melt down" a person from this coast.

"Manufacturers and jobbers are offering very fine lines for the fall trade," remarked Mr. Price. "Women will be pleased with the new fall styles. Another thing which will please them is the fact that the price level on ready-to-wear remains steady. The increases of recent years seem to have flattened out, so our new stocks will be offered at practically the same prices as last season."

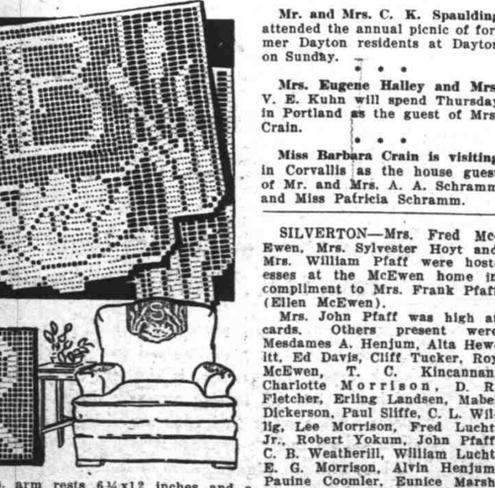

Mr. Price went as far east as New York, and spent most of his time there.
