

Corn Climbs Up and Down

But Ends With 2 1/2 Net Loss for Day; Report Heavy Arrivals

CHICAGO, Sept. 20.—(AP)—In brisk trading with unusually wide fluctuations, September corn today fell 5 1/2 cents, then ran up 6 1/2, but again tumbled, closing 2 1/2 cents net lower.

Uncertainty prevailed as to whether or not some of the larger traders who have been short of supplies to meet their contract obligations to deliver huge quantities of corn this month had yet extricated themselves from market difficulties. Only 126,000 bushels reduction of the amount of uncompleted September contracts was officially shown today to have been accomplished Saturday.

Corn Arrivals Heavy
On the other hand, arrivals of corn in Chicago today were of greatly increased volume, totaling 205 cars. Enlargement of supplies here would naturally tend to prevent any renewal of prospects of a month-end "squeeze" in prices here.

At today's close, the corn market as a whole was varying from 2 1/2 cents lower to 1 1/2 cents higher compared with Saturday's finish, Sept. 18. Dec. 63 3/4, May 64 1/2; wheat 1.02 1/2 to 2 1/4 up, Sept. 1.84 1/4, Dec. 1.95 1/2 to 1.96 1/2; May 1.97 1/2; oats unchanged to 1/2 advanced, Dec. 30 1/2, and rye showing 1/4-1 1/4 cents bulge. Provisions results were unchanged to 32 cents lower.

Moderate Inquiry Puts Slight Crimp in Wheat Markets on This Coast

"The Silver Rood Mystery"

By LEWIS ALLEN BROWNE

SYNOPSIS
During an afternoon party on the lawn of Major Stevenson's place, Gerard Montiech, extremely wealthy man of 50, living on the adjoining estate, is murdered. Montiech wanted Mary, his niece, to marry Forrest's son, David, and said he would disinherit her if she refused. Mary is secretly in love with an artist, Howard Griswold. Forrest's son-in-law, Harlan Stevenson, writer of crime mysteries, is asked to help solve the mystery. He finds that Montiech was killed with a knife which was disguised as a silver rood. This was hanging on the wall in another room from where Montiech was found. Mary, it is learned, left the party for a half hour that afternoon. Griswold, ordered to keep away by Montiech, weeks before, was also on the grounds. Mary, however, swears he was not there.

CHAPTER VI
"Nate is old and forgetful. I tell you, Mr. Stevenson, Howard wasn't here today. I am glad you believe me."

"I nodded and stared at the silver rood on the wall.
"That's odd," I said, pointing to it; "Mr. Montiech wasn't much of a religious man."
Mary glanced at it. There was no sign of any sort of emotion in her expression.
"That silver rood? It has no religious significance, or, I mean, it had none to Uncle Gerry. It was some sort of an ornament he picked up abroad, years and years ago. Once he said it was given to him as a sort of reward of merit."
"Did he ever explain?"
"No more. If you haven't any more questions—"
"Just a minute, Mary." I turned and took the rood from the wall and held it before her. I pressed the ratchet catch with my thumb nail and the still slightly stained blade dropped down into view.
"Oh!" Mary gasped and her eyes depicted amazement and no more, I was sure.
"How—how sort of awful—a knife out of a crucifix! But what—"
She caught her breath. "Was it done with that?" she asked, huskily.

"We have every reason to believe so. The autopsy will decide that. They have taken the blade measurements." I held it out for her to take. She took it without hesitation and examined it.

"If she had used it to kill someone, within a few hours, she could never have touched it again, I believed.
Then she said a surprising thing. "Even if Howard Griswold had been here today—and he wasn't—he wouldn't have known about this. I have seen this almost all my life and never knew that it was a knife, and Howard was never inside the house, much less the library. He has been on the front veranda—and that is all. Don't you see?"
"I don't see much very clearly, Mary. Why not tell me the truth?" She lifted her head and looked at me again.
"I love Howard, and he loves me. Uncle Gerry didn't approve, that's all. He was here this afternoon for a few minutes. Uncle had forbidden me to see him again. I did meet him, down by about half an hour. We were making plans."
"It would have been better if you had told me at first. You didn't really go up to the house this afternoon?"
"No, no nearer than the garden."
"Of course, a poor young man like this Griswold would be hard hit if he thought you weren't to inherit any of your uncle's millions."
"He didn't know, until this afternoon, because I didn't know until today that uncle intended to cut me off if I didn't marry Dave."
"But you did tell him, this afternoon?"
"Yes. He was going to give me up—I wouldn't let him. He's wonderful—he isn't poor. He's an art instructor. We can get along. Don't stranger—or anyone you knew—out there with Mr. Montiech!"

"No sir," Mrs. Johnson straightened up and stared at Harper. "If Mr. Montiech died a natural death, why so many questions?" she demanded.
"You are not to mention this to the servants or anyone else, but Mr. Montiech was murdered," Foxcroft told her.
She was silent a moment. Then she said, "Poor Miss Mary—she must have known, which explains why she seemed to be filled with horror, although she told me nothing."
"May I ask a question?" I said, to Foxcroft.
"Certainly."

"Do you know anything about that silver rood on the library wall?" I asked.
"Rood? Silver rood—Oh, the crucifix—the large one with engraving on it?"
"I nodded.
"Has it been stolen?"
"Oh no, it is right there. Do you know anything about it?"
"No sir. I know that Mr. Montiech wasn't what is called a religious man. I never gave much thought to it. It might have been merely an ornament, or some work of art. I wouldn't know about such things."
"Did you ever handle it?"
"Oh no."
That was all. I asked Mrs. Johnson to send in the maid who cleaned and dusted the library.
Her name was Jackson. She knew nothing about the silver rood. In fact, she didn't know what we meant by "rood." She said she always thought it was a cross. No, she had never taken it down; she had dusted it, along with the other things, but didn't think she had ever actually touched it. We could, she said, search all of her belongings. She, too, thought it had been stolen.
Harper set her mind at rest about this.
"You wouldn't see anyone—any caller, would you?" Harper asked.
"If they came about nine—they wouldn't do—I would see them, as that is the hour I dusted the library."
"And you saw no stranger this afternoon?"
"No stranger—" Miss Jackson suddenly caught her breath.
(To be continued)

you see, Mr. Stevenson—if that horrible thing was used, it couldn't have been Howard—and he wouldn't have gone near the house, anyway."
"Davison says he never knew that the silver rood was a disguised stiletto."
"I don't believe that he did. I don't believe anyone other than Uncle Gerry, knew about it."
"For the present," I advised, "tell me one about Griswold, or your absence from the party. It will have to come out later."
Mary promised.
I sent her back upstairs and went out to where Sergeant Harper and Foxcroft were questioning the servants.

Extreme Losses On Mart Reduced In Belated Rally

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—(AP)—Stock market leaders dropped to new low levels for the past 21 months or longer today, although extreme losses of 1 to 9 points were cut down or cancelled by a slow last-hour rally.
The news picture, while spotty, showed little change and brokerage quarters attributed the further setback in the last partly to weak securities markets abroad, and continued doubts regarding business trends.
Some "bargain buying" and short covering were said to have been principally responsible for the recovery move on the final lap.
The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was off .6 of a point at 57.1, bottom mark for this index since January 21, 1936. At its worst the average was down nearly 2 points. Transfers totalled 1,550,350 shares compared with 814,050 last Friday.

Some "bargain buying" and short covering were said to have been principally responsible for the recovery move on the final lap.
