By MAXINE BUREN

Musically speaking, Salem is off to a flying start for W. E. Kirk and Mrs. L. D. Water- Mr. and Mrs. Paul Perkett, Helen the winter season and audiences thus far have not only been large, but have been generous in their praise of events already offered.

This week marks the first of the series of concerts being given by the Salem Philharmonic orchestra, the group of young musicians who have played in Salem for five seasons.

The concert is of special interest because the group is under the baton of a new director, Edouard Hurlimann, concert master and assistant director of the Portland Symphony orchestra. Mr. Hurlimann, who is Swiss, is a graduate of the Prague state conservatory, has studied in Berlin and Cologne and has taught violin in Berne, Switzerland, Ellison-White conservatory, Reed college. He will play a violin solo, "Ciaconne" by Vitali, as an added feature on the program.

Concert goers who attend the program given by the Salem Philharmonic orchestra do so because they believe in supporting civic enterprises of true worth, and because they enjoy seeing and hearing the performance of bright young musicians with talent, enthusiasm and sincerity.

Choosing Program

It is the conductor's most difficult task to arrange a program that will please the taste of all; entertaining yet elevating a group of widely different persons. The musicians must be fired by the selections so their technique and emotions are at the highest possible point.

The average audience likes novelties, or at least familiar numbers, yet the conductor must avoid music too popular, choosing instead pieces of decidedly worthwhile character.

The Philharmonic orchestra is a civic enterprise, musicians are talented and enthusiastic, Mr. Hurlimann should certainly know how to train his players and how to select music that will inspire the musicians and please the audience. The concert will prove one of the best of the season for parents to attend with children. Seeing youngsters of their own age performing as seasoned musicians will prove a valuable stimulant to lagging interest in daily practice.

Another Concert

The next musical event to come before Salem audiences will be the appearance of the Kyrl orchestra on December 10 at Leslie auditorium. Certainly wide diversity of musical fare will be offered when concert goers hear not only the featured 50-piece orchestra, but the soprano voice of Mary McCormic, who is soloist with the orchestra.

Other soloists are being featured during the program; Director Bohumir Kyrl is known as one of the world's greatest cornetists and has among his musicians a harp soloist and

Adding even more interest to the planned program will be the number "Inflammatus" from Rossini's "Stabat Mater" in which Miss McCormic will sing the soprano obligato and the Willamette Philharmonic choir of a hundred voices will
