"I was actually ill enough to go to bed if it hadn't been a holiday!"
It's wonderful how one can muster new strength when a good time's in prospect. It's an old experience to the secretary on the left who's so smart and costly warm in a brushed wool twin sweater set of the new "bearskin" variety. The cardigan is slide fastened and has four pockets set angularly. Interrupted at typing, a white crepe blouse with a washboard array of tucks down the front, back buttoning and embroidered red monogram where grandma wore her brooch.—Copyright 1937, Esquire Features, Inc.
