General Franco, leader of the nationalists in Spain who are revolting against the Madrid-Vencia-Barcelona government, has closed the French trontier and the Portuguese in 1935 by the Metropolitan frontier of the portion in which his armies hold sway. Since Press, Portland, author M. Leona Portugal has been an effective ally of Franco this closing is rather scarding. London papers try to explain it with reports of a conspiracy of foreign elements in the nationalist army to assassinate Franco.

The "Robinsons" Mystery

"Ared" White, the nom-de-plume of our own General George A. White, could get material for another spy story in the strange case of the couple now under arrest in Russia charged with complicity in conspiracy against the government. This pair got American passports and went to Moscow where they were living in a hotel. They used names of Donald Louis Robinson and Ruth Norma Robinson. Later tallow candles; three in the pulthe state department discovered the birth certificates they submitted were of persons who had died in childhood, but if they had lived would have been about the same age as these persons. This was not discovered until they disappeared and the department pressed Russia for news of their whereabouts.

What their real names are is not known, or whether they are man and wife. The Moscow assumption is that they are agents working in Russia against Stalin, hence "Trotskyists," which is enough to condemn them on. Certainly they must have gone to Russia with some evil purpose, to use some clever means of disguising their identities.

Now the American government can do little to save them, for they are falsifiers, and maybe not even American citi-

So there are threads of a story which may be as thrilling as the plots of many set out in books of fiction. The fear is that the truth will never be fully published: they will be erased, their own true story never told, and of course their mical, 82, Prineville, a daughter fellow-conspirators will make no revelations.

A pair of Salem's 18-year-olds got into trouble in a neighboring county seat. One, driver of a car, was fined $50 for reckless driving, and his companion $10 for drunkenness. Maybe the driver was insulated against liquor, but it is a natural suspicion that the charge was reduced to reckless driving to make sure of a conviction. Just how nuch "reckless driving" has booze at the bottom of it?

The chief of Japanese aerial operations has been relieved of his post in consequence of the air bombing of the Panay. Thus far no one has conformed to the Japanese custom of falling on the point of his sword in contrition for his "terrible mistake;" and no fresh tests of eyesight are reported among Japanese pilots.

A lethal gas chamber has been imported clear from Denver for use on special occasions at the state penitentiary. (Do we all get blue cards again soon, Warden?) Many volunteers make an automobile with the engine running answer the same purpose.

Approving Roosevelt's insistence that the Japanese emperor himself make an apology for the Panay incident, the Astorian Budget says "Japan must be taught a lesson." Quite true; but just how far does Uncle Sam expect to go in his school teaching?

The only friends of "production control" who seem to be getting nowhere at all are those who favor plowing under every third government bureau.

The Oregonian asks, in effect, what the Panay was doing up the river at Nanking. The same question, with even greater point, might be asked of Japanese air bombers, troops, warships.

Was the reason the Japanese air bombers hit the U. S. S. Panav and missed the H. M. S. Bee was beause the latter had more of a stinger?

Bits for Breakfast

12-17-37 Who was the wife of Joab Powell, unique pioneer Oregon circuit rider and most successful evangelist?

The above question reaches the tesk of the Bits man. Meaning, of course, who was she before she was Mrs. Powell?

She was Ann Beeler, called in the late years of her life in Oregon Aunt Ann or Aunt Anna. There is a book on "Joab Powell, Homespun Missionary," published Nichols. From this book one finds:

Joab Powell was born of Welsh ancestry in the hill country of Tennessee July 16, 1799. In the

He had no education except what he picked up; but he knew his Bible almost by heart, and had a rugged way of presenting it to his hearers that stirred them and made converts.

Aunt Ann died May 31, 1872. From that day Joab Powell was a lonely old man. Theretofore the laughing preacher, one of his sons testified, he never smiled again. Such was his devotion to his life partner. And, languishing disconsolately, in less than eight months he joined her on the other shore-January 25, 1873.

Prof. J. B. Horner, Oregon historian, proposed a monument to Joab Powell. With 3000 present, it was dedicated Sunday, June 15, 1924. Many of the most prominent people of Oregon were there. Among them was Mrs. Anna Carof Joab Powell, the only surviving one of the 20 original members; that is, of the 20 who organized Providence church; 19 besides their leader. The 20 names were (and are) carved on the monument that day dedicated. Many memorable speakers paid eloquent tribute. Lack of space forbids quotations, excepting these, from the speech of Prof. J. B. Horner: "The committee . . . selected

'This one thing I do' was his motto in Oregon as he went about baptizing 3000 souls. . . . Can't visit-must be going.

"I'd just love to stay and have good visit, but I really must be going." And sometimes they go and sometimes they don't. You have heard folks say things like that. Everybody has. The record. so far as my experience goes, is held by a woman who dropped in at a friend's home one afternoon at 2 o'clock. She remained until 4:30. During the time she was there she made the statement 18

"When found the man had a broken arm, the cause of which is a mystery." This item appears in a valley news story. Perhaps the fracture resulted from an effort of the man to restrain himself from writing to a friend at Buffalo, describing the weather we are having here.

The heartiest laughers ar usually the loudest lamenters. I don't know why this should be, but I reckon there's a reason for it. The same emotional boiler doing its stuff under pressure of different buttons mebby.

I knew a couple, a man and his wife, over in north Idaho years ago, who were thought by the neighbors to be ideally mated. He addressed her as "honey" and she addressed him as "dear." And it did seem to be pretty ideal. But their "honey" and "dear" were not always the same. I heard her address him as "dear" one day in a tone of voice that might be thought affectionate, but which must have cuddled his blood.

A loving teacher of mine once told me for my own good (she never told me anything that was not for my own good, and perhaps it was for my own good, but there were times when I doubted it) that I was unduly susceptible to external impressions. Just the same, I insisted that I'd rather be licked with a feather duster than with a rubber ruler.

There are different methods for determining the extent to which culture has entered into an individual's being. One method, quite simple one (and the simple thnigs are best, as Bleeker Caraway said when the family sat down to eat a goose) is to take note of those who have a tooth drawn, and those who have it pulled and those who have it

by HOWARD SIMON

In the whole history of art it would be difficult to find a more thorough-going scoundrel and a more skillful painter than Michael-Angelo de Merigi, known as Caravaggio. He was violent and painted violence. He was the first of the great realists. Even the greater Rembrandt was to feel his influence.

Caravaggio was born in Lombardy in 1569. In his early days he had been a plasterer, the son of a stone mason, and had notraining in art. He turned naturally to painting. Before he was 20 he had painted The Martyrdom of a Female Saint. It is his earliest known canvas and hangs at Milan, where most of his youth was spent. When he came to Venice at the age of 20 he was already famous painter.

Life and music and gayety surrounded him in this liveliest of cities. He took a fancy to the musical instruments he now saw. and was to use them in canvasses again and again. Taverns and noisy street scenes and beautiful women caught his eye as well. He moved on to Rome and discovered that brawling provided excitement and that excitement was exactly to his taste. There was a passerby who, he fancied, had offended him. He struck him and to make sure he would not cry out whacked him into unconsciousness with his sword. He hid in a cellar to avoid capture, and went on painting. Shortly thereafter he wounded guard. Violence bred violence.

Enjoyed Fights
He enjoyed quarreling and scuffling. He fell on people of every sort. When thought a waiter in an inn had neglected some nicety of behavior he seized a plate and threw it in his face. From some strategic point he and a companion dropped rocks at passersby injuring several. Before long he was cast into the Tor di Nona prison on the charges of one "Laura and her daughter, Isa-

Before long there was a tennis game that turned into a mortal combat. Caravaggio broke his racket over the head of Ranuccio Tommasini who with no more ado fell dead. Caravaggio was arrested but being badly hurt himself was held under bond of 500 gold pieces before being taken to prison. Again he fled and several months later was working, as peacefully as his nature allowed, in Naples.

Here there appeared a fanatical admirer of his in the person of Leonello Spada who attached himself to Caravaggio, "imitating his mannerisms in painting and personal charm." Spada from what is known shared all Caravaggio's faults of character and none of his painting genius. They painted and made merry while negotiations went on in Rome for Caravaggio's pardon. The pardon failed to arrive. The two friends took themselves off to the Island of his greatest work. He had hardly finished his masterpiece when a with older persons, J. W. Barney, scenes and murders, pictures of bully had the notion that he would like himself painted. The robes of the Grand Master still lay in his studie. Caravaggio conceived the plan of painting this ill-favored client as a Knight of Justice also. The Grand Master, furiously angry, "gave reason to the Knights of Justice and had Caravaggio thrown into jail." Meantime the faithful and enterprising Spada made off with a Moorish slave and was nowhere to be found. Caravaggio did not linger either. He climbed the prison walls one night, boarded a ship and set off for Sicily. In Sicily with the Knights of Malta hot on his trail he was obliged to hide. When the search became less intense, he worked in Syracuse and Messina. And his reputation grew to startling proportions. Peace Not Desirable Perhaps he could have lived in peace here. But peace was not desirable to him. He quarreled with a schoolmaster, gravely wounded him and once more had to fly for his life. He stopped at Palermo, then returned to Naples hoping for permission to return to Rome. Before it had reached him, however, he was again involved in a brawl at an inn. His aggressors being misled by his disreputable and disfigured appearance. When they at last released him, the boat had long since disappeared, taking with it all of Caravaggio's possessions. He dragged himself slowly to Pont-Ercole. But a fever and his wounds proved fatal. He died a few days later-in 1609, at the age of forty. All Rome was shocked at the news of his death, and verses were composed in his honor. One poet wrote grandiloquently, "Death and nature would not be outdone by Caravaggio whose bold pictures beat him unmercifully. Again he boarded a boat but it was grounded and he was forced to disem-bark. Sentries on the watch for another criminal, arrested him.
