

Wheat Takes 2-Cent Drop

Probable big Carryover in This Country Is Cause of Day's Tumble

CHICAGO, Jan. 11. (AP)—Prospect of a big carryover from 1937 supplies of wheat in the United States did much to tumble Chicago wheat values approximately 2 cents a bushel today.

Virtual complete stoppage of any immediate European demand and wheat from North America, also had a notable bearish effect. So too did the Buenos Aires wheat market in making an abrupt right-about face following yesterday's sharp plunge. In some cases Buenos Aires and Winnipeg quotations fell 2 1/2 cents.

Holdings Are Heavier

It was estimated by a leading Chicago authority the July 1 excess of wheat in the United States as compared with a year previous would be 90 to 100 million bushels.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were touching the day's bottom level, 1 1/4-1/2 under yesterday's finish, May 96-96 1/2, July 90-90 1/2, with corn 1/4-3/4 down, May 61-1/2, July 61-1/2, oats 3/4-1/2 off, rye showing 3/4-1/2 drop, and provisions unchanged to 17 cents setback.

Berry Men Hear Problems Talked

Remedy Against Dwarf Disease Is Digging up, Says Zeller

Sixty small fruit growers met in Sublimity yesterday to hear exceptionally fine discussions of their problems presented by Dr. S. M. Zeller and W. D. Edwards of the state college. County Agent Harry Riches arranged the meeting.

Zeller, discussing virus diseases, said the loganberry dwarf diseases which has hit some sections of the valley is hot new and was first found on blackberries 12 or 15 years ago.

Dig Out Infected Plants

The best and only successful method of combating it is to dig out the infected plants and destroy them by burning.

Zeller also discussed crinkle disease on strawberries and in this connection mentioned that of persons who made application to grow certified plants for sale a large percentage had to be turned down on the basis of disease showing in the fall inspections.

New List Ready Soon

He said a revised list of growers of certified berry stock would be made available through the Marion county agent's office in a short time.

Edwards, talking on spittle bug and weevil control, stated that so far the use of 50 per cent rotenone affords the best control of dusts available. He reported fields dusted by power equipment have shown better control because of better coverage on plants.

Illustrated lantern slides were used in the discussion of dwarf, leaf spittle bug, crown borer and root weevil.

52 Pea Growers At Woodburn Meet

The best control known so far for the Austrian field pea weevil is a 75 per cent rotenone dust applied with a hooded duster which directs the force of the dust into the vines, Dr. J. C. Chamberlin of the state college told 52 field pea growers from Woodburn, Mt. Angel and St. Paul who gathered at the Woodburn city hall Monday for the educational meeting arranged by County Agent Harry L. Riches.

Chamberlin emphasized the need of a stronger rotenone application on the field peas than on berries. Up to now, the method outlined provides a 95 per cent control, which is the best known now.

The hooded duster may be used at any time, even in a strong wind. A discussion of types of carrier for the dust, time of putting on the vines and other matters of interest to the growers was also held.

Smiths Promoting New Type Chicken

WALDO HILLS—Mr. and Mrs. William Smith have just completed a new 13x22 foot chicken house on their farm located on the golf course road in the Evergreen district. The building will accommodate their 100 pure bred New Hampshire hens.

Mrs. Smith sells hatching eggs and although the New Hampshire breed is a new one she has no difficulty in selling the eggs as the hens combine the weight of the heavy hens and laying qualities of the Leghorns. The Smiths came here two years ago and bought a small farm. Last summer they purchased the adjoining 20 acres.

A 40-foot fir tree in the front yard of the Max Scriber home blew down, fortunately falling away from the house.

"GIVE HER WINGS"

By MARIE BLIZARD

CHAPTER XXV

Julie paid a check for four cocktails that would have bought her a hat in Fayette.

At the moment that the thought occurred to her, several other ideas involving mathematics thrust themselves upon her.

There was the matter of the cost of her immediate residence. After Thursday she was no longer the guest of the Cook-Walters company. Her fine suite at the Consular would belong to someone else and she knew she could not afford to keep the room herself until Friday. She had no idea what the room suite cost and she thought wisely it would be better if she didn't.

What if Stanley didn't call her there before she left on Thursday? And if she wasn't leaving for Fayette on Thursday, would Cook-Walters buy her tickets back to Fayette? She decided that she would buy her own tickets, call Stanley Lombard herself and tell him that she was going to be out of New York Thursday night and she could meet him somewhere. She could stay at the Y. W. C. A.

There was the little matter of clothes to consider. In the clothes closet in New York she had riding breeches, a silk shirt, a leather jacket, two evening dresses, a wrap, Her other dress she wore. She didn't even have a suitcase.

More of her precious board would have to be spent. She had already spent fifty dollars for the gray tulle gown. But after the luncheon that day, Mrs. Derwent had handed her a small envelope which enclosed a fifty dollar bill.

Another fifty had already melted away paying for little things, presents, taxi-cabs and the like. Well, she had plenty and there would be more.

Playing a little golf, dancing, tennis and swimming presented a series of problems. Nancy had said, "Anything goes," but Julie knew better. She bought a rubber swim-suit because it cost only a couple of dollars. She hoped fervently, nothing serious would happen to it. For tennis she got herself a white play suit that cost more than the materials with which she could have made herself a half a dozen of them. A bright pink tweed skirt was matched with a paler pink sweater which she knew was daring and effective with her hair. After those there were other needs: taxi-hooped sports shoes, opera pumps, socks, a night-gown and a negligee. And a suitcase. She spent a sum of money that made her feel hollow inside to contemplate.

Her purchases she had sent to the Consular and moved from there to the humble Y. W. C. A. with an aplomb born of her conviction that this was her last humble move.

Stanley Lombard asked her if she'd mind meeting him at his office which made the whole thing as graceful as could be managed.

She set off through New York traffic at four o'clock that Friday afternoon and if you could see Julie Allerdice sitting beside her host in his yellow car, her hat drawn low over one eye, you'd think that week-end on Long Island were long familiar to her. You'd never know that her heart tripped against her ribs and her mind was alight with a thousand eager eyes reaching out to take everything in.

And you'd never have known that she was rehearsing the lines she would say to Paul Hitchcock.

"Hello... isn't this fun? Nancy thought I should see Long Island before I go back to Fayette. A really funny experience to see so much scrub oak... but some of the places are quite attractive, aren't they?"

She heard from Paul since
