"He's a rat terrier—but not professionally, of course!"

He's a darling now, even though crossed in his natural talents... and his mistress is a darling in a dress crossed to the end of its long tunic with tufts each about a half inch from the next. Each one is punctuated by a shiny button in the front and white lace frosts the black crepe at neck and sleevelets... For your winter trip, or just for dash in your January wardrobe—take a black and natural checked skirt, add a topper (this one's sleeveless) of natural linen with big, black buttons and top that with a dashing little black wool jacket.—Copyright, 1938, Esquire Features, Inc.
