"Isn't that just like a man?—Inheriting all that money right after I threw him over!" When fate deals out a cruel blow, you'll suffer less if you envelope yourself in a tea gown such as hers—of black ottoman, very deco- lete and romantic with its fluttering ruffle of turquoise chiffon to match the night robe beneath. The slim-fitting, black crepe dress on the right has an interesting curved side closing in the bodice and coat-like closing in the skirt. The open, diamond shaped neckline is refreshingly new.—Copyright, 1938, Esquire Features, Inc.
