

Grand Showing Prison Drama

Warden's Daughter Gives Young Trusty New Hope in Unusual Story

Grim in implications but unfolding a poignant romance of young love on a prison threshold.

"Penitentiary" shows the escape from moral disintegration of a young prisoner undergoing a severe punishment for an accidental crime.

No one but Walter Connolly could bring out the wallop in the private drama of the ambitious warden and his decision to wreck his own career rather than let the man his daughter loves be crushed by the law.

STORIES OF Master Painters

by HOWARD SIMON

"Shall Louis XVI, King of France, die by the guillotine?" "Yes!" the answer rang out in the People's Convention, and one of the most determined voices was that of Louis Jacques David, painter.

David had come to revolution through art. The subjects of justice and liberty were familiar to him through his study of the classics.

DAVID (SELF PORTRAIT) 1748-1755

perment. When the young artist had tried and failed to obtain the Prix de Rome, he started himself for three days in an effort to die.

More Roman than Romans In 1775, at the age of 27, he set out for Rome. Almost immediately he became more Roman than the Romans, forsaking the gay sensuality of France and adopting stern Roman Classicism.

Back in France the tall, strongly built painter, with a face distinguished by a twisted jaw, and determination in every feature, looked with distaste at the bourgeois subjects painted by his contemporaries.

His marriage was a short cut to wealth for his wife was the daughter of the king's architect. His father-in-law was generous as well as rich and financed another trip to Rome. Here, within a year, David completed his first masterpiece, "The Oath of Horatio." It was a sensation in Rome.

Today it is difficult to understand how its hollow forms and cold color could so have stirred the emotions of the people, but its effect was electrifying, and as moving as a splendid revolution oration.

He followed the furor with another canvas that represented once more, self-sacrifice for the republican ideal. With the showing of these canvases, leadership was thrust upon him.

Fashion Imitates Him At once he became the leader among painters, and initiated a new school that took for its model the Greco-Roman classics.

David continued to paint magnificent portraits and heroic canvases, yet he gave himself unreservedly to the revolutionary cause; he was elected to commemorate in painting the celebrated Oath of the Tennis Court. It provided that the members do not separate until the Constitution was established.

He became a member of the Jacobin club which had for its object, the comradeship of those most radically opposed to the monarchy.
