Legacy in Russia Is Awarded Here

Estate of Russian Woman Is Basis of Ruling; Status Involved

Because Gertrude Urbat, niece and legatee of the late Arthur Boran, was banished with her mother to Siberia during the World war and has not since been heard from, the probate court here issued an order to divide the legacy, $970.25, equally between Bertha Boran and Elizabeth Knobloch, wife and daughter, respectively, of the decedent.

Boran's will had left the two heirs $1 each and made the niece residuary heir. He died in this county in 1932.

In a brief accompanying a petition for reopening of the estate to distribute the residue fund, W. C. Winslow, administrator de bonis non, pointed out that if the niece died as believed by Boran before his death, the legacy automatically lapsed, and if she had not died, the legacy was nevertheless void under Oregon law because Russia does not reciprocate in the matter of allowing United States citizens to collect on estates in that country. Attached to the brief was a series of translations and explanation of Russian decrees on the subject, obtained through the American embassy.
