MT. ANGEL—Rev. Eugene Medved, rector of Mt. Angel college, in his talk at the joint musical and oratory contest given in the college auditorium Sunday afternoon, told of the great strides made by music in the institutions of learning throughout the United States. He stated that there are 35,000 school orchestras and 25,000 school bands. He cited the Latin adage "In times of war the music is silent" and reasoned that this increasing appreciation of music was a sign that this nation still loves peace and is not preparing for war.

Eloquence and fine reasoning were displayed by the four contestants for the gold medal given for oratory. Ivo Hauman of Mt. Angel, spoke on "A Call to Action" in which he showed that Americans have proven to be poor defenders of the heritage left by forefathers. His cry was for better leadership and a reputation of the nation begging at our doors for acceptance.

He outlined steps to be taken by parents in the training of their boys, principally among which he named good example, sound moral code, supervised reading, athletics, and the ability to think for himself.

Tom Maloney of Portland answered the question "Is Labor to Blame?" in no uncertain affirmative.

He stated that labor has been labor's own enemy that in the unions under the influence of unscrupulous leaders have opened the breach between capital and labor and have turned the antidote into poison.

Mr. Smith is a prominent resident of Clerk Lake where he has lived for 17 years. Besides his own beautiful home where he manufactures "Gnomes" he has erected eight new residences near the Clear Lake Evangelical church. He also built a fine residence just south of the store building and expects to start at once to erect three more. How does it feel to be born rich?

This dimpled little lady's father would smile if you called him a rich man—for he isn't at all. But, being a thoughtful father, he wanted to make certain that, even if he were not here, things would work out for his daughter pretty much as he had planned them—even to a college education.

And he has made sure of these things—through life insurance!

Now he knows that his little girl—and her mother, too—will never be in need, if anything happens to him.

And having done that, he has gone one step further. He is building up a life insurance plan that is making his own future secure, a plan that will pay him some sort of monthly income in later years.

It's a pretty grand thing, he will tell you—the way life insurance can help a man to achieve security—for himself and those he loves.
