The School Elections

The annual school elections, in the Salem district as well as in all other districts in the county, will be held on Monday. The vote in these elections is usually light, only a small percentage of the eligible voters taking the trouble to turn out. Yet the school directors are perhaps as important a set of public officers as any other. They administer one of the larg- cember of the same year. They est shares of public funds raised by taxation in the community, and their decisions have important bearing on policies affecting training and leadership of the community's youth.

In the Salem school district election Monday there are four candidates for two positions. Mrs. David Wright and Percy A. Cupper, incumbents, are seeking reelection. Francis E. Manley's name will be on the ballot and there is an organized campaign for writeins in support of Roy Harland.

Whether it appears on the surface or not, the issue in this election revolves around a question of educational policy. The supervisory system which has been built up in the Salem schools has been under fire from a faction in the school board headed by Mr. Cupper. The Statesman has contended throughout that this system is constructive and essential.

That, along with some other matters involving a coordinated and harmonious school administration, constitutes the sole issue in this school election so far as The Statesman is concerned. No personalities are involved.

As this newspaper sees it, those voters who want to promote a constructive and harmonious school administration will vote to retain Mrs. Wright on the board, and write in the name of Roy Harland. In this connection, it should be emphasized that those desiring to vote for Mr. Harland should both write in his name and place an "X" in front of it so as to be sure that the vote is counted.

Mr. Harland is a young man but he has demonstrated qualities of leadership, conscientiousness and civic-mindedness which qualify him for membership on the school directorate, and citizens anxious to maintain the excellent manage- river now stands, on September ment which school affairs have enjoyed in Salem will make no mistake in voting for him and for Mrs. Wright whose viewpoint and past attention to her duties as a director entitle her to continued support.

Gill on the Farm Bill

Ray W. Gill, master of the Oregon State Grange, is generally recognized as a liberal. He has been a staunch friend of labor and an enthusiastic advocate of public ownership of power. He is a republican, but more or less the same type of republican as Sam Brown and Peter Zimmerman. We mention this only because it gives added significance to his expression of opinion, in his annual address to the state grange t Klamath Falls, upon the new farm bill:

'Frankly, I am very much concerned about the trends that this bill establishes. If we are to treat this as emergency legislation or as a stopgap until other plans can be put into operation, then the situation is much less serious but if this bill is the beginning of a permanent plan for agriculture then I am decidedly against some of its regimental provisions. I refer especially to that part of the bill which sets up governmental control over the acreage quotas which farmers 'can produce in certain major crops. Whenever the government by all its force and power, tells a farmer how many acres of this crop or that crop he can plant and how much he can sell without being penalized, then I think we should know what kind of road we are

These acreage quotas are established upon the historical base of the farmer's production of the given crop in certain preceding years. . . . If you are a corn grower and have a historic base, then you are allocated a certain acreage which you can produce without being penalized. If you are a wheat grower who has not been raising corn, then you are to all practical purposes out of the corn business, and to become a grower of corn, you must buy the vested right of corn farming from some farmer who has established a historical base. "Granting the argument that this is being done to prevent a big surplus of corn production and falling markets, I still say that we must analyze where we are going. Are we going to surrender our political freedom that we may secure economic advantage? I hope not, for our entire freedom whether it be social or economic is dependent upon our political freedom. "If the business of producing corn, is a vested right then is It not equally logical to say that the production of wheat, potatoes, fruit, vegetables or any other crop is also to become a vested right. . . . is it not equally logical to say that the profession of a lawyer, an engineer; the trade of a carpenter or mechanic; the business of a groceryman or clothing merchant are all and each of them a vested right to be secured upon the historic base of their preceding years of business . . .

What is to become of the young people . . . what is to become of those who wish to change their calling. In a few years under such a system we will slip back to the dark days of Europe, centuries ago when the caste system was at its height. I am fully convinced that we do not need to surrender to the government these all important rights, for which our people have streggled forward through centuries of slow political progress."

Gill went on from there to enumerate a number of the other farm problem solutions including the ever-normal granary, crop insurance, stabilization through government purchase of surpluses, purchase of sub-marginal lands, discourage- doe standing in the road only a ment of corporation farming through taxation, better stand- short distance away. ards for grading farm products, tax relief, equalization of taxes, easing of the farmer's debt load-all of which might be accomplished without any regimentation.

His views are quoted to emphasize the fact that farmers and farm organizations, including individuals and groups who might be friendly to the aims of the national administration, are seriously disturbed over the nature of the present crop control regulations.

Probing Un-Americanism

On the basis of his past antics we had Rep. Maury Maverick of Texas ticketed as a bass-drum pounder, and it is with surprise that we discover him opposing the resolution to investigate "un-American activities," which included principally the German-American Nazi Bund.

Maverick claimed that the government already has all of the essential facts about the Bund, including the fact that its membership is said to be somewhere around half a million, and that it has 30 military camps scattered throughout

As for allegations that there are "millions and millions" of communists preparing to seize control of the nation and that a nazi openly advocated the assassination of the president, Maverick classed them as hysteria but added that if hey were true, the thing to do was not to order an investigation but to mobilize the army forthwith.

His objection to the investigation was that it would stir up inter-racial feeling and possibly, in view of national tension and economic stress, might even result in persecutions. Another objection was that everybody had a different idea of what was "un-American," whereas the things that really should be investigated and attacked are unemployment and

Maverick was undoubtedly correct in declaring that the danger to American institutions lies not in goose-stepping factions or soap-box agitators, but in hunger and unemployment, and likewise correct in his accusation that congress has largely neglected its duty to devise real solutions for these iditions—even though the solutions that he would favor might be as unsound as those that were invoked. MISSION BOTTOM-The Armstrong and DeSart clan will hold the 11th annual reunion at the Knights of Pythias hall in Silverton on June 26, from 10 a. m. till 5 p. m. with a basket dinner at noon and program.

George DeSart and wife Malissa, her father, mother and four brothers. Thomas and wife, Edgar, Theodore and Thaddeus Armstrong started across the plains from Illinois May 18, 1864, and arrived at The Dalles in Detook a boat from there to Salem, only to remain a few days, then went to Oregon City, where De-Sart, a brick mason, worked on the first paper mill.

Settled in Silverton From here he moved his family to Silverton where he built some of the first brick buildings. He also worked on the old state house in Salem, riding a horse from Silverton to Salem, then turning her loose so she might go home. One time she lost her way and mired in Lake Labish where some men found her, helped her out and she was most of the week arriving home.

Before coming to Oregon Deart enlisted in the cavalry as a private and was promoted to cor-poral under General Sullie, in Ne-

The pioneers had many interesting encounters crossing the plains. When they came to the Platt river they unloaded their belongings, launched their wagon boxes, which were water tight, swam or waded and piloted them across, allowing their cattle to swim.

Two days out from Boise City, where the marker on the Snake 20, 1864, a halt for a few hours was called and a baby daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. DeSart. She was named Lola Ruth and in November 15, 1884, was married to Richard Patterson at Sil-
