flowers, violas now. Replant or set out new irises. Get ready to plant the Oriental poppy some of you wanted to set out in spring. The poppy should go into the ground as soon as it is dormant. You may have to wait until the middle of August but get your ground prepared for it. You don't have to send east for the poppy. There are a great many beautiful varieties grown rigth here in the Willamette valley.

Cuttings: July is also the time to start a number of the shrubs from half-ripened wood. Layer heathers, rhododendrons and daphnes now. They take to it much more easily than at almost any other time. The shrubs will be rooted and ready to transplant next spring.

Tulips: If your bulbs are growing in a place where watering frequently is necessary now, lift the tulip bulbs. Gradually dry them in a shady airy place. Replant them in early fall. Divide Primroses Now Primroses may still be divided and set out. But they will require some watering after they have been transplanted. Naphthalene flakes should be dug in around the primroses. Grubs and dead foliage and roots. Naphthalene flakes discourages this.

The deer problem was brought the Oregon Wild Life federation, who said that the deer came from 50 to 60 miles to feed in the Murderer's Creek basin during the winter and a serious problem was the outgrowth. It isn't, he explained, a question of too many deer, but one of insufficient food to care for them during the winhoped to reduce the deer in that cisco, 8-6, 7-5, in the junior men's basin.

"Don't let sentiment or emotrying to work for the best interest of the deer."

Objects to Policy Arthur Moulton, also of Portland, and past national director. took the other side of the question by making the statement he "regretted the action taken in 'Murderer's Creek by the commission. There are not too many deer in Oregon. We don't need to let them starve. If necessary we can feed them in Murderer's Creek by bringing in bailed hay. Or we can take the deer out and distribute them elsewhere."

An informal and friendly discussion followed with points brought out favoring each side. Mr. Moulton was the principal speaker of the evening, urging the raising of more pheasants and fish and making it eventually possible "for the man who likes to go afield with his dog and gun, to do so, and for the man who enjoys casting in the streams, to be able to do so with satisfactory results." Mr. Moulton urged clean streams and the support of the bill covering this issue. He referred to "Silver Creek as a sad name for a sewer." and insisted that the small coast streams leading into the ocean be closed to commercial fishing. He closed place in the Valley Girls' softball with the explanation that the Izaak Walton league was "one of America's bids for a more hopeful America—the kind our forefather's found."

The group voted to hold anpects were reported as somewhat day and here Friday with Dallas. A no host supper was planned less favorable than earlier in the season. Sacramento valley yards bloomed at an unusually early dence on Olinger field here Wedhat Reber Allen was made delegate to the state convention to be held at Portland.

Elk Open Season Decreed, Clatsop

PORTLAND, Ore., July 9-(AP)
-An open season on elk in Clatsop county, possibly the first ever declared, was ordered today by the state game commission to the City of Salem, Marion Counfor the period of September 1-7. ty, Oregon. Some members of the commission KLAMATH FALLS, July 9-(AP) thought it was the first time an to the lien of any and all taxes open season ever had been held standing against said property. while others believed there had been such a season once before. The commission also ordered an open season of September 1. October 31 on Willamette valley silver gray squirrels.

Einarsen said the state once was famous for its production of beaver but the value of pelts produced now had fallen to less than $300,000 annually, whereas New York state was harvesting a $2,000,000 crop and Louisiana, $5,000,000. The problem, he said, was only one of reestablishing the beaver which the commission will study.
