Homes and Housing Projects

Current argument in Portland over the advisibality of sponsoring a housing project, inspiring a "letter to the editor" in which the writer questioned the justice of providing even a little luxury for the less successful members of society while those who strive harder or more intelligently and succeed a little better will still have to provide for them-

That is indeed a moot question thoese days, popping out not only in the matter of housing projects but in such matters as federal buying of butter for families on relief while self-supporting families haev to get along with substitutes. But as for the housing issue, that has heretofore been threshed out from nearly all possble angles-in congress when the housing bill was up for passage. Fourteen solid pages of argument on this bill appear in the record of house proceedings for June 2. One interested address-even though some colleagues assailed it as not pertinent to the subject, was that of Rep. Clare E. Hoffman of Michigan, who said in paid:

"I remember the old home in which I lived when I was first married, and I still live in the same one. The cost above the foundation was just $1000.' Of course, it did not have a tinted a porcelain bathtub in which flowed hot and cold scented water, but, after all, the old lady and I and the kids sa came. They alongand they came along, thank God-could get clean, first, in the old wooden washtub, which we hauled in from the woodshed, and later, as improvements came, in the nice, shining galvanized tub, by the use of the soft soft which we made ourselves. And gentlemen would be surprised how a good dose of soft soap in real hot water mixed together in a old wooden tub will make one feel not only physically clean but mentally and morally

"Do you want to know what a home is ad what it is for? It is not a big place that sets away back behind a stone or iron fence in some city or surburb . : . My ideas of a home is a little place that is set off by itself. A place that is sacred to the family, where mother reigns supreme, where each has his part of the toil, or the pleasure; where each is the other's counselor, helper, sympathizer; where each is a part of the whole, and the whole is one of happiness or sorrow, if sorrow comes. "There may be no culmney in this home of mine . . .

and the bed I sleep on . . . is simply some old pieces of rope tled to the crosspiece at the head of the bed, and drawn tight with a stick twisted in, and n may be possible there is nothing in the mattress but some straw, a luxury indeed compared to the old corn husks that some of us used to sleep on.

"But it is , . . a place that is your own, where you are king, where you wife is queen and the raggedest, diriest-faced kid when he crawls up on your kneee is a prince or princess, a gift from the sometion of a place that may be called a home."

Apparently it was Rep. Hoffman's thought that a resident afford could never be such a dence which people couldn't afford could never be such a home as he described. He felt, presumably, that there is something of hollow mockery in this "more abundant life" for which people are not required to pay in the real medium surroundings, the first named of useful services. Probably he "had something there," but falsely accused of petty pilferalas, he did not have time to develop it. Instead he wound ing, as far beneath his nature as up with the suggestion that in these new houses that the from Hood's topmost pinnacle occupants will neither own nor pay for adequately, the motto on the wall will not be "God bless this home" but 1865, at Appomattox. "Franklin be kind to me."

Justice to the Strong

Sympathy for the "under dog" is an admirable senti- which marked the ending of the ment, but one so generally held that its possessor is not greatest armed struggle in hisreally entitled to take pride in it. With some it is merely tory up to that hour. Who were reflected self-sympathy. The individual has been the under dog and identifies himself with others in that position.

Somehow or other, Helen Wills Moody is always getting the worst of it in public opinion. Five years ago, in the midst of a final match for the national women's tennis title, she injured her back and defaulted to Helen Jacobs. Although it later developed that the injury was serious, some promoted by the death of Col. sentiment persisted that she should have stayed on the Bliss to the captainty of a comcourt and taken her beating.

This year Helen Moody tried a comeback and, though S. army because rebuked by obviously slowed up by her years of retirement, managed to hardboiled Brevet Lientenant battle her way through the younger set to the Wimbledon Colonel Buchanan in a harshly finals where she met Helen Jacobs again. This time the barked order-told to quit drinksituation was reversed: Helen Jacobs injured a tendon in having resigned, was at the time her ankle and thereafter was helpless. Helen Moody won of the experiences together of the match as quickly as possible, saying later she thought Sheridan and Ord in the pioneer Yakima district making a poor that was the humane thing to do.

Somehow, Helen Moody is in bad again, though what else for wife and children, with no the might have done is hard to imagine. The bitterness that intention of ever again entering followed the 1933 episode had its effect in the actions of a military career; his wife from both top-notch stars on this later occasion. It explains why a proud family, herself the own-Helen Jacobs did not default; also it explains why Helen Moody uttered no word of sympathy. But the sympathy goes to Helen Jacobs because she was long ago cast in the role of under-dog in this rivalry.

Tennis is only a game; but the human tendencies there exhibited hold true in other aspects of life. Sympathy for the underdog very easily becomes injustice to the performer of greater ability.

The Vicksburg Anniversary

Why, in the celebration of anniversaries, the fall of Vicksburg, whose 75th anniversary came last July 4th, was overcoked, we do not know. Gettysburg got all the publicity. More about the first 7-10-38 irrigation in Oregon, and Sheridan, Ord, Grant, generals present at Appomattox:

2 2 2 (Continuing from yesterday:) Quoting still from Sheridan's Memoirs: "Our main difficulties" were now over, and in due time we reached The Dalles, where almost every one connected with the expedition voted it a wretched failure; indeed, General Rains himself could not think otherwise, but he scattered far and wide blame for the failure of his combinations. "This, of course, led to criminations and recriminations, which eventuated in charges of incompetency preferred against him by Captain Edward O. C. Ord, of the Third Artillery.

"Rains met the charges with countercharges against Ord, whom he accused of purloining Father Pandoza's shoes, when the soldiers in their fury about the ammunition destroyed the mission. "At the time of the destruction a rumor of this nature was circulated through the camp, STARTED BY SOME WAG, no doubt in jest; for Ord, who was somewhat eccentric in his habits, and had started on the expedition somewhat indifferently shod in carpet-slippers, here came out in a brand new pair of shoes.

"Of course, there was no real foundation for such a report, but Rains was not above small things, as the bringing of this petty accusation attests. Neither party was ever tried, for General John E. Wool, the department commander, had not at hand a sufficient number of officers of appropriate rank to constitute a court in the case of Rains, and the charges against Ord were VERY PROPERLY IGNORED on account of their trifling char-

"Shortly after the expedition eturned to The Dalles, my detachment was sent down to Fort Vancouver, and I remained at that post during the winter of 1855-56, till late in March."

Listen, you student of American and Oregon history! Turn the clock up from those hard and sordid days in the wild Yakima hills during the deep snows of late November, 1855, when Capain Ord and Second Lieutenant Sheridan were enduring hardships together, in primitive, drab

Present there to receive the sword of Lee were three Union generals, whose leadership had brought about the turn of events that culminated in the gestures the three?

They were this same Ord, this identical Sheridan, and U. S. Grant, who had three years before left serving here in the Oregon country while ranking as a first lieutenant, having been pany at Humboldt Bay, Cal., and there had resigned from the U. ing too much or resign; and er of slaves, which she held till the Civil war was over.

History is full of startling shifts of fortune, but few are more engaging than the ones just mentioned, the foundations of which were largely laid in the pioneer Oregon country while fighting and dealing with hostile Indian bands.

Now, a little more on the question, or rather, the several questions, raised in the third paragraph of the first article of this series site of Walla Walla, Washington, may be considered the first use of irrigation on a major scale in posts, above Oregon's present ries by Sheridan.

The beginning of irrigation there was in 1852. That was and 2nd Lieut. P. H. Sheridan irrigated their jointly owned lands near Fort Yambill, of which they had charge, from 1855 till they were called away to the Civil war

For over a year we have attempted to procure permission to increase our power from 100 watts to 500 watts. We have permission now to

Salem is a Fast Growing City

-and KSLM intends to help make Salem grow. This Capital City deserves a bigger station, and the Federa' Government realized this fact so they granted us permission to increase the power of the station five times . . . Now we are busy planning many improve-ments to better serve YOU with the finest radio programs available in America and Europe.

> Through the Mutual Broadcasting System we are able to present many fine programs not only from the United States and its territories, but also from European centers.

A Statement From Our President-

TO THE CITIZENS OF SALEM:

Several years ago I founded "The Voice of the Capital City, KSLM," and was impressed at that time with the splendid cooperation extended by the townspeople and merchants. Recently we needed to prove that we should have a more powerful station to better serve the city and surrounding communities. Many of Salem's business and professional persons willingly gave of their time to testify in our behalf. Today, I wish to publicly thank each of you for your cooperation, and promise that KSLM will grow with Salem, and do its best to warrant your continued approval. Let me close by reminding you that "WHAT SALEM MAKES-MAKES SALEM."... Let's buy Salem-made products ...

> Sincerely, H. B. READ, PRESIDENT.
