Steels at Top In new Rally

Motors, Mail Orders, Farm Tools, Coppers Also in Vanguard

NEW YORK, July 12 (AP)—After sleeping through the greater part of today's session, the stock market awakened with renewed climbing vigor in the final hour and leaders ran up 1 to 4 points.

The ticker tape was behind about 2 minutes at the peak of the rally, but slowed down at the finish when profit selling reduced top marks in many cases.

One incentive for the belated upsurge, brokers said, were reports from usually reliable sources that steel company officials had been holding informal conversations with union heads regarding a downward readjustment in wages to offset recent price slashes. It was understood, however, that no formal proposals in the wage matter had been advanced.

Steels Lead Push

Steels led the forward push, but motors, coppers, mail orders, farm implements and a wide assortment of specialties were in the van. Even rails and utilities, while hardly strong, did fairly well on the move.

In addition to the steel wage talk, the market had the benefit of a sharp revival in commodities and improvement in bonds following forenoon hesitancy.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was up 1 point at 48, or 1/4 a point under the year's high. It was the best day's advance since July 1. Traders estimated 1,619,800 shares compared with 1,087,630 Monday. The list was the smallest volume since the birth of the "baby boom" on June 20.

Corn Climbs Full 3 Cents

Hits new High Records for Season, Taking Other Grains for Boost

CHICAGO, July 12 (AP)—Corn whirled suddenly skyward 3 cents a bushel today, reaching new high price records for the season and giving a big hoist to other grain.

Speculative buying of corn broadened to large proportions aroused by reports that hot weather threatened to bring about severe crop damage. It was generally believed excessive rains at planting time and since had resulted in widespread shallow rooting, making the crop unusually susceptible to any prolonged period of heat.

At the close, corn futures were at the day's top level, 2 1/2-3 cents above yesterday's finish. July 60%, Sept. 61 1/2-62, Dec. 61 1/2-62; wheat 2 1/2-2 1/2 up July 73 1/2-74, Sept. 74 1/2-75; oats 1/2 up 1 c cent advance; rye showing 1 1/2-2 cents gain, and provisions a jump of 10 to 17 cents.

Wheat, rye and oats all received upward impetus from the action of corn. Black rust misgivings as to wheat were prevalent both sides of the Canadian boundary. The heavy crop improvement in North Dakota and Minnesota spring wheat was asserted to have been reached, and Saskatchewan advices emphasized rust damage danger from lateness of the Canadian crop.

"THE STOLEN GOD"

By Edison Marshall

SYNOPSIS

Ned Holden, son of a Yankee mother and an American missionary, looks for a million square miles of savage country. Back from a dangerous expedition, Holden now plans a long holiday in Bangkok, Siam, among the Americans there. He meets Virginia Griffin, from St. Louis, Missouri; Daniel Griffin, noted Oriental art collector; his secretary and Virginia's fiance, André Chambon. Immediately attracted to Virginia, Holden is planning a sight-seeing jaunt with her when he learns of the theft of the Buddha Emerald Buddha. Revolution may result if the Buddha cannot be restored to its shrine before the Siamese winter festival six weeks hence. Holden, loathe to undertake the search since Virginia says nothing of his presence, Holden allows the collector is under suspicion, finally consents to do so. Next day, he searches the hotel rooms of his new friends. Virginia returns unexpectedly and finds him there. Unable to give the true explanation of his presence, Holden allows the girl he already loves to believe him a common hotel thief. An hour later, Chambon angrily accuses Virginia of secretly meeting Holden. Surprised at her own strange reactions, Virginia says nothing of the recent encounter, but charges the fiery young Frenchman with being too dictatorial toward her.

A few French officials and adventurers pass outward through that gate, and sometimes big bronzed fellows in gay garb pass in, linger a few days to see the wonders of the city, and then return to their fastnesses in the Laotian hills. So a tall stranger, brown as wild honey and clad in Laotian dress, attracted no special attention from the hurrying crowds on the street.

A stray Frenchman smiled at his colorful turn-out. The Annamites looked up to his high-bred head and dark eyes straight as a white man's, and remembered their ancient envy

Griffin then to Chambon, last of all—by the law of the East—to Virginia, ourselves, have known the great river since our Lord Buddha lay under the Bo-Tree. That is honor enough.

"By the way, how did you happen to know that native word?" Griffin asked his secretary. "You're an amazing young fellow."

"Read it in a French travel book, and it took my fancy," Chambon answered with a smile.

In the meantime, Virginia was gazing at the brown man with a troubled line between her brows. "Fan," she broke out at last, "haven't I seen you some place before?"

"Long ago, perhaps, Heaven-Born. Our Shining One teaches that men and women live and die many times before they obtain peace. After each life a curtain is drawn, but sometimes a little light steals through. Perhaps in some other existence we sat by the now-broken fountains of Chheng-Kuang, drinking rice wine from the same bowl."

Virginia did not appear offended by his boldness. There was a twinkle at her lips and a sparkle in her blue eyes. This tall bronzed pagan wished to be their interpreter and guide, but he was obviously a gentleman, as LaGrèze had said. An American dyed-in-the-wool, she wanted no fawning, and was secretly delighted that he could answer her so straight and so well. And her father chuckled.

"Fan, you get the job," he said dryly. "Now compliments are over, let's get to business. The governor has offered to advise you as to our outfit for the trip into Laos, and you must have it ready to start right after lunch."

"Step into the next room and wait, T'Fan," LaGrèze directed. "I'll bring you the lists in a moment."
