Huge Planet Swept by Storms

As Jupiter, biggest of the sun's family of planets, swings into position for its annual opposition, astronomers are training their telescopes on the vast areas of turmoil in the chill, poisonous atmosphere of the earth's larger neighbor. Violent changes are seen as the titan spins dizzily on its axis. Storms, marked by intricate detail in bands or belts across the 88,000-mile diameter. These storms extend from far into the southern hemisphere to an equal distance in the northern portion. This sketch by Arnold Mountfort was made at Griffith observatory, in Los Angeles. It shows the storm bands and also, at left, is one of Jupiter's moons casting a pin dot shadow on the planet's surface.
