The woodshed and seven cords of wood were also consumed. The Woodburn and Mt. from the chimney. Most of the household goods were saved. Part of the loss is covered by insurance.

Bobcat Is Killed
Near Lulay Mill

SCIO—A bobcat was brought down by a rifle shot after being treed by hounds in the vicinity of the Lulay sawmill southeast of Scio this week. Ray Bates, Elmer Limbeck and Barton Sledge set upon the feline with trail hounds after the big cat had been seen in the timber by trappers for the company.

Among recent arrivals to Scio's Cech colony is Frank Chrusimsky, formerly of Clutier, Iowa. He is a former neighbor of the Will Doprakovsky family, and plans to locate in the Willamette valley.

Some damage to the Shindler bridge across Thomas creek east of Scio was reported when a log truck struck the edifice. The truck was also damaged, but no one was injured. The Shindler bridge soon is to be replaced by a concrete structure.

Joe Drulik fractured two ribs and his hand recently when he fell through the roof of a shed at his acreage adjoining Scio on the west.

Newest Market
And First Home
On Same Ground

SILVERTON—Silverton's first suburban open front market will open Saturday on the same property on which stands Silverton's oldest house. E. H. White owns both, living in the oldest house and managing the newest market. The market will be known as the Silver Creek Food market. Many of the most modern features have been incorporated in the new market. The house was built by J. M. Drake and Solomon Smith, Silverton's early carpenters, in the first of the sixties. The lumber is hand planed. The window sashes, door frames and doors were all made by hand. The inside woodwork still retains its original coating of paint. The fireplace was made from tuffa rock quarried at an old quarry at Drake's crossing above Silverton. The old home was built for James M. and Lucinda (Davis) Brown among Silverton's prominent early pioneers. It was in the hands of the Brown family until it was sold a short time ago to Mr. White.
