School lunches for growing children should look to their vitamins and minerals as well as sufficient calories for the unusually energetic child. Unsatisfied appetites in adults or children often signify a real lack in some of the requisites of health.

A school lunch sandwich, practically custom made for the child who requires concentrated energy food, consists of mashed, boned sardines, minced beet pickles and chopped or sliced ripe olives in salad dressing. Sour pickles may be substituted if the flavor is much preferred. The whole alphabet of vitamins are there; sardines contribute vitamin D, ripe olives supply vitamin A, and beets hold a small portion of vitamins A, B, C and G. The energy values of ripe olives are especially worth while.
