Rearrangement of UCC Numbers Aim

Claims Will Soon Be Put on Social Security Number Basis

Social security account numbers will take on added importance for Oregon workers between now and January 1, officials of the state unemployment commission announced Wednesday.

The commission is preparing to switch its entire claim control procedure to social security account numbers chronology. Instead of filing claims for unemployment compensation benefits according to Oregon claim numbers, all files will be rearranged to national security account numbers.

Claimants were urged to have one, but only one social security number and to correctly refer to claims for benefits by that number.

2000 Numbers Duplicates
Commission officials estimated that about 2000 of the 78,000 claimants for jobless insurance in Oregon have duplicate social security account numbers have more than one. In some cases, two or more numbers have been issued, due to misunderstanding between employers and employees.

The social security number eligibility and benefit rights are established, officials explained. Benefit credits may possibly go to another, unless identification by one social security number is possible.

Workers 65 years old or over who are still earning wages also were urged to obtain social security account numbers. They do not need one for old age benefits, but they do for unemployment compensation.

Multnomah Court Authority Denied

In Probating Estate of Armstrong, Ruling in Supreme Court

The Multnomah county probate court does not have authority to probate the estate of Marshall R. Armstrong, who died a year ago at Walla Walla, Wash., the state supreme court ruled Tuesday.

The court, reversing the appointment of William S. Nash of Portland as administrator by Judge George Tazewell, held that Deschutes county had jurisdiction because Armstrong was a resident there.

The Deschutes county circuit court had appointed Eulah C. Mulkey as administrator.

Chapman Opposes Transactions Tax

Would Ruin State, Injure Present Assistance, Rotary Is Told

Target for the heaviest guns of C. C. Chapman, editor of the Oregon Voter, in his summary of measures on the November ballot at the Salem Rotary club luncheon Wednesday, was the proposed transactions tax in Oregon to pay monthly pensions up to $100 to elderly people.

This bill would practically ruin the economic life of the state, prevent the cessation of all except absolutely necessary transactions and imperil the old age assistance program now in force, the speaker warned. Mentioning that proponents of the bill said the tax would raise 24 million dollars annually, Chapman said that was poor proof that the tax would pyramid.

Extravagant claims are made on both sides in the argument Chapman asserted. He said it over the proposed labor law, would not eliminate labor trouble and that neither would it ruin the unions nor eliminate the closed shop. It would, he said, prevent such occurrences as the picketing of Salem restaurants, employees of which were not involved in any dispute. It would prevent a store which he said was the AFL boycott of CIO lumber. Chapman said he would vote for the bill in spite of its shortcomings. Labor in Oregon is now, he said, "behaving beautifully."

Chapman said he favored the bill allowing the governor 20 days to sign or veto legislative bills after the session, the anti-stream pollution bill, the repeal of double liability requirements for bank stock which he said would favor small community banks, the marriage license examination bill, the two anti-gambling bills and the increase in legislative pay.

He opposed the Townsend plan convention bill but said it was of minor importance; opposed also the alcoholic control bill because it would "make spies of everybody," and the constitutional amendment legalizing lotteries and gambling.

Restaurants Here Notably Sanitary

In a recent sanitary checkup made by Batty Cooper, city sanitary inspector for the Marion county department of health, sanitary conditions in restaurants and beer parlors in relation to dishes and beer glasses were found the best of any time this year.

Sanitary regulations allow a bacteria count of 50 for either a glass, a spoon or a fork. Laboratory tests showed that the average count was 7 per article at this last inspection. Mr. Cooper stated that this is one of the best reports he has ever made. A periodic check-up is made of all restaurants and beer parlors in the city.

Urges Extended Grazing Lands

Declassifying Areas From Timber Class Requested When Appropriate

Declassification of logged-over and burned-over lands so that tracts more valuable for grazing may be used for that purpose instead of being protected as timber, was urged by officials of 10 western Oregon counties before the state forestry board Wednesday.

Reclassification of some of the lands also was asked by the delegation.

County Judge Boyington of Clatsop county charged that many tracts of land were now classified as timber when they should be open for grazing. By releasing these lands for grazing, Boyington said both the state and counties would receive increased revenues.

Larger Tax Base Sought
More leniency in burning slashings also was urged by the county officials. It was argued that the proper declassification would result in restoring large tracts of grazing lands to a taxing base.

A. C. Marsters, Roseburg, declared that the county officials were not asking anything unreasonable and added that they repeatedly had expressed a desire to cooperate with the forestry department.

Slash Burning Discussed
Members of the forestry board asked whether the existing laws would permit any let down in regulations governing the burning of slashings. State Forester Ferguson said permits already were being issued for burning slashings under proper regulation.

Ferguson denied emphatically that his department favored the state taking over these lands foreclosed by the counties.

Speakers also asked that the counties be relieved of certain responsibilities in connection with the burning of slashings.

Members of the forestry board said they were in sympathy with the proposal, provided it could be worked out.

Divorce Case on In Circuit Court

Defendant on Stand; Ehlike Case Goes by Default Before Judging

Circuit Judge L. G. Lowelling will return here at 10 a.m. today for concluding testimony and statements in the contested divorce case of Roger C. Hald against Katherine J. Hald. At adjournment time yesterday the defendant was on the stand, ready to be cross-examined by attorneys for her husband. One more defense witness remained to be presented.

Rudolph Ehlike withdrew his answer as defendant yesterday and his wife, Mary Ehlike, was granted a divorce by Judge Wewald by default. The decree also gave her custody of four children, reserving defendant's right to visit them, and ratified a property settlement that provided for plaintiff's interest in four West Washington lots and houses, and personal effects. Plaintiff agreed to release to defendant an automobile and to give a $125 mortgage in connection with payment of a $50 attorney fee.

Judge Lowelling took under advisement, with briefs to be submitted, the case of Sven Mattson vs. Thea Jensen, involving ownership of lot 22, Allen's second addition to Silvertown.

Wrecking of Old Courthouse Plan

Word that plans for demolishing the old courthouse will be in the hands of PWA officials before the November 3 election was sent the Marion county court yesterday by Whitehouse & Church, Portland architects retained to design the proposed new county building. The architects also expect to have plans for excavation, field offices and other preliminaries ready by that time in order that the county may be in a position to go to work promptly if the voters authorize a new courthouse and the PWA renews its federal grant.

The court understands that the architects will be paid for their services only if it becomes possible to build the new courthouse.
