Salem Typographical Union Honors Its 50th Anniversary at Banquet; Local Is Second Oldest in State

Sorrowing Friends Mourn at Memorial Services and Interment

Sorrowing friends, who included old officials of the state of Oregon, paid final tribute to James W. Lewis, late warden of the state penitentiary, in impressive memorial services held Monday morning at the Rigdon chapel in this city.

Above everything else which characterized his life, James Lewis was a fine man, four-square, said Dr. W. C. Kantner, who conducted the service. "Among these evidences of death, I give testimony that James W. Lewis lives," said the minister who spoke of his 60-year acquaintance with the Lewis family. "His monument is the institution at the end of State street. Go there, see the gardens he created, the orderly institution he conducted, and you will find the best testimony to Mr. Lewis' life."

Admired by Prisoners
Dr. Kantner, in his eulogy, spoke of the regard with which the warden was held by the men who were kept in prison. Before him, as he spoke, was a large floral piece of rosebuds contributed from the savings of the men whose custodian Lewis was. Hundreds of other floral offerings were at the services.

Sunday the inmates of the prison had attended a memorial service at the prison chapel conducted by Rev. P. W. Erickson.

At the services yesterday, Dr. Henry Marcotte offered the prayer and Professor William Wright sang.

Active Palbearers were Dan J. Fry, secretary of the state board of control, James J. Richardson, Sheriff Martin Pratt of Multnomah county, Harry N. Niles, chief of police of Portland, Kehne Wain and Ed B. Wood.

Interment was in City View cemetery.

Willamette Youth In Need of Work

A Willamette university freshman who hitch-hiked back forth to school daily from beyond Independence—a round trip of 28 miles—has reached the point where he has to leave work or give up. He has to leave home before daylight to get to his early classes.

So yesterday his mother came to The Statesman office and asked if this newspaper would help broadcast an appeal that he might have odd jobs of any kind. The youth, a chemistry major, has three afternoons off each week and all day Saturday.

Any business man or individual having work for him should communicate with Dean Daniel H. Schulze of Willamette university.

Members of the union and their wives, gathered at 5 p. m., enjoyed a three-hour program. Judge L. H. McMahan made the opening address, followed by Mayor V. E. Kuhn.

W. E. Kimsey spoke, representing the International Typographical union, F. J. A. Boehlinger spoke in behalf of the State Federation of Labor, Charles W. Cray represented the Salem Trades and Labor Council.

Here from Portland to represent the oldest typographical union in the state were O. R. Clayton, now president of No. 58 and William A. Bowes, secretary. R. A. Harris read a poem, "Movable Type." Musical numbers were furnished by Jean Adams on the accordion and Stanley Metz on his trumpet. The typographical orchestra gave several selections.

Sprague Introduced
Charles A. Sprague and R. J. Hendricks, editor and editor-emeritus of The Oregon Statesman, were introduced and spoke briefly. Mr. Hendricks recalled that he came to The Oregon Statesman in 1884 when it was being published in the same room now occupied by the cafe.

Professor George Turnbull of the school of journalism at Eugene was unable to attend but his carefully prepared biography of Typographical Union No. 210 was made a part of the program for the evening. Mr. Turnbull pointed out that Will H. Parry, one of the charter members of the Salem union, was the first editor of the Capital Journal, served later as city editor of the Post-Intelligencer, became a successful Seattle business man and later was a member of the federal trade commission. Edgar B. Piper, another printer-reporter member of the union, became editor of The Oregonian.

An honored guest was Mrs. George Pearce who began work as a printer in Salem setting type on the "Mercury" in 1875.

The Salem union, only six years younger than No. 58 in Portland, is the second oldest typographical organization in the state, ten years older than the Pendleton organization, third in age in Oregon.
