He had come up nearer the center of the room than he figured, and for the first time in his life, Miles Standish Rice was gripped with the nausea of sickening panic. It rolled over him in a dizzy wave, clutching at the pit of his stomach, causing his breath to whistle in his throat. The tar-black room was deathly still—but it was not entirely dark! The tar-black room was deataly still—but it was not entirely dark! Glimmering at him, shoulder high from four sides, were small patches of shivering fire which might have come from the pits of the damned. Fighting the clutches of a night-he started to raise his gun.
