Frisco's Labor Ague

Los Angeles had its sects and salvationists but peer of all the cities in the country for prolonged and costly strikes is San Francisco. For four years the Golden Gate metropolis has gone from one labor embroglio to another and trade and commerce have been vastly injured.

Only a week ago was the long-drawn-out Teamsters' tieup settled. Yesterday the eight-weeks' old retail clerks' strike dragged to a conclusion which did not give the strikers a closed shop but permitted recognition of the union as a bargaining agency.

A year ago the hotel business of San Francisco was laid low during the tourist season by an expensive, bitter controv. ersy while the longshore-shippers' disputes have been so frequent that grass still grows on many waterfront docks.

Quite naturally San Francisco is groping for some solution to end this costly conflict. The entire state of California is voting on a labor union regulatory measure, somewhat similar to that proposed in Oregon. A committee of 100, designed to bring peace between employers and employes by a series of conferences, has been active for the last six months. The futility of its work to date is evidenced in the costly strikes of this summer, tieups which are rapidly tearing down San Francisco's position as a wholesaling and jobbing center and diverting that business to Fresno, Sacramento and Los Angeles.

The four-year record of San Francisco is so bad, its cost to every individual, every sector of business has been so large, that public reaction should demand a rule of reason between the capital-labor groups on the bay. Unless San Francisco can find a formula for easing its labor tensions, the community must shortly forfeit the business leadership in shipping and wholesaling she formerly claimed.

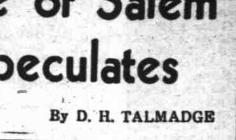

Klamath Makes a Record

The Klamath Falls district has been hard at work for a decade on two big problems: diversification of its income and a higher yield per acre from its agricultural products. Its pine timber has brought big payrolls but its cattle, barley and its potatoes have greatly augmented and stabilized the cash coming into the area.

While No. 1 potatoes are bringing only $1.00 a hundred wholesale in the metropolitan markets, the average yield per acre of Klamath potato raisers is going to set a new high in 1938. Leading the way has been James Hammond, a Merrill 4-H club lad, who got 536 sacks of Netted Gems on one acre, a yield of 893 bushels and a new record for Klamath county. The Herald and News, which sponsored the competition, says young Hammond's mark is only 200 bushels behind the world's record.

Through the help of intelligent county agent cooperation, and in 1866-7 was assistant inthe average per acre yield of the district has steadily mount- spector general of the Departed. In 1922, the average grower in Klamath county took only aide of General Sheridan, 1869-96 bushels of potatoes from an acre. By 1932 that had jumped '73, then took part in the Banto an average of 216 acres. The highest recorded mark was in nock Indian campaign of 1878. 1936; when the average yield per acre was 312 bushels, a record which the county expects to exceed this year. Klamath marketing of potatoes is slightly behind 1937 but October 31 saw 1014 carloads already shinped out of the county and 1080 truck consignments made. Higher per acre yields, improvement of quality, and development of a strong California market, have given Klamath Falls its own depression solution. Nor is the top reached; there is good reason to France. believe, says the Herald-News, that a world's record for production of potatoes can be set on an acre of land in the Klamath basin.

It comes with poor grace from most of us, I think, to lament over the dreariness of this life. Something is forever happening. Thus, early in the present week, I dropped in at a cafe for a dish of coffee. And a section of the city fire department dropped in at the same place at the same moment. A fire somewhere in the cookery department of the place. Quite exciting. Red Rimp dropped into a similar place and climbed onto a stool one day. And while he was sitting there some portion of the gas works under the counter exploded and blew a hole about the area of a straw hat through the front of the counter. Red fell from his stool just in the nick of time. Had he remained on the stool a fraction of a second longer he would have been compelled to spend the rest of his life with a large hole directly through his anatomy. That was a nice tribute Earle Headrick, news editor of KSLM, sent out over the air to the late Warden "Jim" Lewis a few days ago. Gil Blitt says he enjoys listening to football returns, but he does not discuss the game, because the has such a poor understanding of the game. Ridiculous! That is the prize essential in the making of a successful discusser. "You Can't Take It With You" with which picture numerous local critics say is the best ever shown in a Salem theatre, closed a run of 12 days at the Grand Tuesday, is showing a record on cashier's reports well up with the top-notchers. The Willamette valley is not a very desirable region to drive around in if one is desirous of determining other regions to be more beautiful, more desirable as a place of residence. The man who goes round with a scowl on his face, May be going somewhere, but doesn't get anyplace. Gain your small ends, and perhaps your greater ones, by non-resistance. I got this from a guy named Tolstoi.

It Has Happened Here

Even an original pump-primer must get financial chills to read the record of the federal treasury for the first four months of the 1939 fiscal year. Three billion dollars will have been poured out in four months, a rate of outlay exceeding by half a billion dollars the first four months in the fiscal year of 1935 when the country was trying to spend its way back to prosperity. In four months the deficit is up more than a the latest inovation in modern hillion dollars and it can be confidently expected that the winter demands for WPA and PWA will send the red ink to a new high by the time June 30. 1939, is at hand.

The staggering scale of federal expenses and deficits is in face of the heaviest tax rates since war-time plus new taxes on payrolls never before utilized. Each year, save one, the New Deal government has added to its costs, never tapering them when the business recovery of 1936 and 1937 was supposed to bring retrenchment.

The apologists for big spending always defended the New Deal's lavish outlays as temporary. As soon as business got under way-there would be retrenchment. The debt would be reduced, so a backlog of credit could be laid for use in the next depression.

The New Deal's budget program has reversed these predictions. Every year. in every way, the floodgates of the treasury have opened wider. The bond market has been pegged. Social security reserve funds have been gobbled with government debts.

Prophets who feared inflation were first ridiculed but as the extravaganza at Washington continues, their warnings now sound prescient. It has happened here-a national march to insolvency of federal credit. With more billions to be spent for rearmament, for railroads, for larger relief payments, the nation marches steadily on to inflation or repudiation.

Oregon State's football, which started so dolefully this fall, has done an about face, so complete and so startling that fans who came in September to weep and pray are now jubilant over the comeback of Stiner's Staters. The elevens at Corvallis have always been unpredictable. Seldom bril liant in play, usually dogging through a season with reverses which cut the fans hearts, there has always been enough fundamental stamina and football ability to make Oregon State a team one ultimately to be reckoned with.

Remember five years ago when the Trojans were invincible? It was the dark-horse Oregon States who rose up in Portland to hold Jones' men 0-0 and to do it without changing a man in the lineup.

This year gloom descended early on the Corvallis campus, Idaho, which was much stronger than the dopesters knew, made meat of the Beavers. But Stiner did not despair. Down in Los Angeles where the sun always shines too bright on Webfoot invaders, the Trojans were held to only one touchdown. The highly-rated Huskies were clawed to death in Seattle. Washington State took the count. And a bit of luck, a half of a rabbit's ear of glue on a back's hands, would have put the Staters in the win column over the Golden Bears. The 1938 eleven at Corvallis has offensive strength.

missing quantity for so many years when the Beavers could hold a line but make no touchdowns. Meanwhile the tiring Lemon-Yellow eleven at Eugene, which flashed so brilliantly as the season opened, is in a morass. The early season predic-
