Multnomah Judge Declines to Accept Test Suit for Injunction

PORTLAND Nov. 25-(P)-Circuit Judge Robert Tucker, declining to accept a test suit request to restrain the sheriff and district attorney, ruled today theatres offering cash premiums to attract patronage violated the lottery stat-

The action was brought by Carl R. McFadden, theatre operator, against District Attorney James Bain and Sheriff Martin Pratt. About a dozen theatres have pro moted the plan, known generally as bank or cash nights.

Not Lottery Is Claim McFadden asserted the lottery element was not involved because no consideration was necessary to enter the drawings.

"The mere fact that some coupons are given to non paying patrons does not alter the fact that these people who come to the theatre and wait on the outside have contributed a consideration in the invonvenence and trouble in coming to the theatre and waiting until the award is made and they in large measure aid in the general advertising scheme which is the purpose of the bank night,' the judge said.

Some Change Minds who did not plan to pay admission later changed their minds. The federal and state courts had found, he continued, there was "present a valuable consideration ... and all the elements going to make up a lottery . . . namely, prize chance and consideration.
