"I just suffered a severe setback. My husband met one of the former suitors I'm always bragging about!"

One of those things you hope won't ever happen, but can only be nonchalant about when it does. And to be gracefully nonchalant, give me an all enveloping, glowingly red evening cape like that above with revers and huge square pockets embroidered in flaming metallic threads. Perky as anything is the stiff little padding on the formal brown suit, right. The skirt's fullness is all concentrated in back and a luscious mink collar falls over the shoulders dipping downward toward the hourglass waistline.—Copyright, 1938, Esquire Features, Inc.
