CHAPTER XXVII d pause and then, "It rests entirely The man standing uneasily before Avis took a deep breath. "I'm not with you now."

CHAPTER XXVII A Avis took a deep breath. "I'm not trying to buy you although I sound as if I am, And I know I'm trying to do the unforgiveable thing, tak-ing you away from the girl you're engaged to marry. But in a way you took Constance away from Terry Cannon. Now I'm trying to take you away from a girl I'm de-voted to, a girl who is better than either of us, Gordon. She believes in things we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a long time ago. But it was our mis-fortune when we stopped believing in a life, and it was chilly autumn and he had no money and no job and no future. And for the first time she noticed that deep lines were stehed
