Parole-Probation Bills Are Drawn

Trio of Bills Designed Upon Recommendation of Reform Group

Three bills designed to carry out the recommendations of Governor Charles H. Martin's interim committee on parole and probation reform, were being prepared Wednesday for introduction by Senators Robert M. Duncan of Burns, Ronald Jones of Brooks and Douglas McKay of Salem. They may fall into the senate hopper today.

One measure provides that sentencing judges would fix maximum sentences, with the three-member parole board determining the minimums after investigation.

Would Supervise Paroles
Following release from the penitentiary the paroled convicts would be under the direct supervision of five assistant parole and probation officers.

The board members would serve six-year terms and would receive $10 a day for each day the board is in session. Appropriations under the bill aggregate $50,000 as compared to $12,000 now spent for parole services. Members of the committee would be appointed by the governor.

The board employees would include a chief parole officer, a deputy parole officer, five assistants, two stenographers and a part-time psychiatrist.

Bill Not Retroactive
The measure would not affect any convicts now under sentence. Cecil Edwards, parole board member, declared that of 448 convicts paroled in the past four years, 150 have been returned to the prison.

"It costs $300 a year to maintain each convict in the penitentiary," Edwards said.

Gilbert Avers Education Flop

Materialistic Teaching of Last 30 Years Given Blame for His

"The educational system we have financed and built up for the past 30 years has failed," said Dr. Dan Gilbert, famed journalist, author and lecturer, last night in the first of a series of addresses he is giving at the First Christian church under the auspices of 16 Salem churches.

"It has failed because it has built on a materialistic foundation," he continued, pointing to the contribution "mis-education" has made to the crime wave and communistic trend. He cited representative straw polls, which revealed that one out of four college graduates are socialists, to back up his statements.

Lays Crime Blame
Gilbert blamed the major portion of the crime wave to juvenile delinquency on communistic politicians and educators who are undermining respect for private property and for the commandment "thou shalt not steal."

He attacked John Dewey, saying he has never believed in God and represents the free-thinkers' anti-God convention held in London. He took a strong line against Laskey, the University of London professor who is on his way to fulfill a 10-week lecturing engagement at the University of Washington, saying Laskey was identified with the free-thinkers' anti-God convention held in London.

Another Talk Tonight
"Great Britain is dumping all its lunatic fringe on us and we are dumb enough to take them and pay them larger salaries than they could get in England," Gilbert said.

He condemned the proposal for a federal grant for education in that it "will mean a federal control of local schools and lead to making them agencies of administration propaganda not unlike WPA."

Gilbert's topic tonight will be "Revolution or Revival?" The Nazarian choir of 60 voices will have a program of special music.
