Headache With Silver Lining

It's amazing what people will buy and swallow in order to attain that certain dizzy feeling, when they could get the same effect merely by attempting to rationalize this nation's a well balanced supporting terrisilver policy.

Back in 1934 a congress which had ceased to do its own thinking passed a silver purchase act which authorized the treasury to buy all the silver that was offered, from any source, until the nation's silver supply should amount to onethird of its metal monetary stock. Since the gold supply, for various reasons, has been increasing enormously, silver purchase has never caught up with this ratio.

New a senate committee has started an investigation of the operation of the silver purchase act. Secretary Morgenthau defended the act, at the first day's hearing, on the ground that purchases of silver from abroad have stimulated and sympathy. the buying power of half a dozen nations. He mentioned Chi- she was born Martha A. Stewart, na. Mexico, Canada, Peru, Chile and the Philippines.

As to whether the United States is still buying silver from Mexico in view of that nation's expropriation of agricultural and oil lands of American citizens, Morgenthau was not from Knoxville, Iowa, whence able to give a definite answer. No purchases are being made they had moved from Missouri, in direct from Mexico, but there is no way to detect Mexican silver offered through some other country.

As a matter of fact this silver policy forced China and Mexico off the silver standard because the price offered made silver bullion worth more than their silver coin. Morgenthau is right, in a way; but what is the value to this nation of exporting goods with one hand and paying for them with the other by buying silver at a price above the world market?

The silver policy was born of the inflationary idea, for it developed out of an international conference aimed originally at restoring the gold standard but dropped suddenly because it had a depressing effect upon realistic stock markets. And it still involves an inflationary peril. for the treasury has power to issue silver certificates up to $1.29 per ounce of silver it holds. but has done so only up to 43 cents. Senator Thomas of Oklahoma advocates the full utilization of this

On the investigating committee is Senator Pittman of Nevada, now apparently dubious about the foreign purchase of silver; but it was largely his influence as head of the powerful silver bloc that brought it into being. Of what use is all this silver, bought for far more than it will bring in the world market? Westerners still use the silver dollar, but the silver in it is worth only 47 cents; it is token money the same as paper, and much more awkward to handle.

It is certainly time that the government reviewed its silver policy and called a halt on foreign purchases at an unwarranted, pegged price. Removal of the subsidy to the silver mines involved in domestic purchase is probably too much to expect.

Politics Is a Rough Game

Woodrow Wilson came back from the peace conferences in Europe, fired with enthusiasm for the machine that was going to prevent wars in future—the League of Nations. His erected the first church in Lane political opponents in congress gave him the works.

Herbert Hoover fought as best he could against a world depression that was none of his making. His political opponents gave him the works.

Right now Franklin D. Roosevelt is moving into the last quarter of his tenure in the White House, and his political opponents, both in the opposition party and in his own party.

Roosevelt's appointments which require senate confirmation, his relief program, his foreign policy, all are targets for these opponents. We are inclined to feel sorry for the president-forgetting that he led the forces which gate his predecessor the works. Politics is a rough game, FDR has elected to play it and he must take the bumps and bruises along with the rest. But is politics, played that way, a good county's superintendent of

Some of the policies which are being kicked around under this savage attack may be sound policies. The Statesman secured the location of the Unianalyzed in considerable detail some time ago, the president's foreign policy, his reasons for growling and encouraging his satellites to growl at the dictators. His purpose was to im- of the institution, and in that press the dictators with this country's sympathy for the European democracies in the hope of discouraging them from rash adventures. That may have been dangerous procedure. but the president considered the European situation desperate and thought extreme measures justified. Whether he was right or not, the tempest stirred up at home over the sale of planes to France, and over the "secret" meeting with a senate committee, has robbed his gesture of effectiveness.

If the president was wrong in this instance, he will be right in others; and then, while his opponents continue to give him the works, the country will suffer. Furthermore his opponents may overplay their hand and arouse popular sympathy for the president, thus defeating their own ends. Roosevelt is moving toward the close of his administration: the zie river 39 miles above Eugene. possibility of a third term has all but vanished-barring just During late years she has presuch a reaction of personal sympathy. For the good of the country as well as for the good of their own aims, the presi- there. dent's opponents should moderate their attacks and in vital matters, forget politics entirely. But they won't. They'll give him the works.

Legislative Efficiency

There is before the legislature a proposal to adopt in Oregon the California "split session" plan under which the state ing. It was for the general good. lawmaking body takes a recess after introducing bills and before taking them up for consideration. Now comes the Oregonian as an advocate of the Kansas plan, which calls for a permanent "legislative council" to map needed legislation between sessions, with a staff of employed experts to assist.

The discussion emphasizes the inefficiency of Oregon's present system, under which 90 divergent minds are suddenly brought into physical proximity on the second Monday of January every other year and faced with the vague task of agreeing upon and enacting within a theoretical 40 days, all of the new laws that the state needs.

History repeats itself from session to session. There is slow, aimless wandering for the first half of the session, fairly well directioned procedure for a week or so and then a fi-

Some reform is necessary. The California plan is reported to be unsatisfactory in practice. The Kansas plan merits investigation. There have been other proposals for getting some of the assembly's work whipped into shape before the session opens. The legislature should seriously consider this problem while it is "hot." Between sessions, the difficulty is forgotten until it has to be gone through all over again.

Aunt Martha's going away leaves a vacant space: life of a great good Oregon pioneer woman:

The Aunt Martha of this columnist, the best Aunt Martha he ever knew, went away on Saturday last, her great spirit making its flight to the fields of asphodel beyond the stars.

She was Mrs. T. G. Hendricks, Eugene, who had lived in that upper Willamette valey metropolis and its vicinity over 87 years, a full and useful life where grew from a wilderness a fine city and tory, of which growth she was helpful part.

Her deceased husband's father was a cousin of the father of this writer: that is how she became his Aunt Martha; an apparently tenuous thread, but in fact gripped as with bands of steel. When he was a struggling student "baching" his way, her bounteous board was ever a welcome one to him. She never failed to have words of encouragement

Her father was Elias Stewart. in Polk county, Mo., December 20. 1848. The Stewart family, father and mother and six children, started across the plains the spring of 1852, with two covered wagons and four yoke of oxen to each wagon.

That was the "great" immigration; 50,000 people got through to Utah, California, Ore-gon (about half to Oregon), and 6000 or more were buried in unmarked graves along the way; on the Old Oregon Trail. The mother of the family was one of cares and burdens of this world. 6000 or more, succumbing to the plains disease called "cholera." Death came to her on the North Platte about 40 miles west of Fort Laramie; her coffin made bliss was in spirit and in truth from wagon boards, her dirg a lady. request that her body be buried deep carried out.

"Pap" Stewart, as he was familiarly known in his last years, acquired land, by trade, soon after his arrival in Oregon, which became a part of the townsite of Eugene. So Aunt Martha lived nearly all of her more than 90 years in Eugene.

Her husband, Thomas G. Hendricks, who died December 12, 1919, was also a member of a pioneer family of Lane county. Mis mother was Elizabeth Bristow, whose father Elijah Bristow erected the first dwelling for whites in Lane county, arriving there in 1846, having come across the plains to Fort Sutter. and wife, parents of T. G., came | west conference title. in the 1848 immigration, and Pleasant Hill. They erected the first school house in Lane county; district number one. They county, there. The Hendricks and Bristow firm erected in 1866 at Eugene the first brick building

Elijah Bristow was the first man from his locality (in Virginia) to volunteer for the war of 1812. Being a crack rarksman, and General Andrew Jackson taking note of it, he had special services, including couting, in that conflict. Also, he fought in the Black Hawk war.

T. G. Hendricks was one of Eugene's first merchants; on her first city council; one of the first mayors; was eight y ars Lane schools; started her water system; was the leading member of the soliciting committee which versity of Oregon at Eugene; a member of the first building . Today committee; for 24 years a regent period chairman of the executive

In 1883 he, with S. B. Fakin, junded the bank of Hendricks Eakin, which they made the first National bank in 1886. Its control is still in the Hendricks clan. He donated the Hendricks park to the city, and no forward lookiing enterprise since the town's first days has lacked the hearty support of that family.

Aunt Martha had two homes the pioneer one on a prominent site in Eugene, a summer home called "Poujade" on the McKenferred the country home, and lived her last days and died

The state of Oregon (highway commission) needed a new right of way to straighten its highway over the McKenzie pass. It would all but take away the best part of her Poujade property; nearly ruin it. Others demanded large damages from the state in such cases. Aunt Martha asked nothso she was for it, without money and without price. The same circumstances came to pass as to the street that ran by her city home property. She gave the demanded space, and would take no money from the

But-but what? But that would not be heaven for her. Aunt Martha would not want for herself a better place along the streets of gold than were enjoyed by the least of her sisters or brothers released from the Martha means lady.
