Style - Smiles - - - by Gretchen

"Whatever makes you think men are better drivers? What man could powder his nose, steer a car, and wave his hand all at the same time?"

We think she's got something there—as good as her new reefer. A reefer of navy woolen, gone soft and feminine with pockets built into wide front panels and revers pointing sharply to broad, padded shoulders. The mustard shades are staying with us for spring—with a plaid overlay in the coat at the right, used on the diagonal for flared skirt and pockets, otherwise straight up and down.—Copyright, 1939, Esquire Features, Inc.

Markets Feature Mid Winter Specials

The markets today feature almost any green vegetable and show attractive displays of mid-winter fruit specials. New potatoes are here to stay, and appear on tables for the remainder of the spring.

Spinach and mustard greens join Swiss chard to make a good display of winter vitamin-containing vegetables.

Broccoli and its cousin cauliflower are both in good shape for cold weather menus.

Green peppers look crisp and fresh.

Lots of cabbage is shown in markets, with both white and red in evidence.

Squash remains as a winter staple.

Parsley comes in such abundance, it's good to use for the main flavor in soups or sauces.

Green peas are fresh and good.

Green beans are shown in most markets.

French artichokes will be found at every grocer's.

Celery and celery root are in good condition, the former appearing mostly in the green varieties.

Brussels sprouts are among the best green vegetables.

From under the ground come parsnips, beets, carrots, green onions, turnips and sweet potatoes. Radishes, too, are shown at all shops, some in the large white variety.

Cranberries show bright and red among the fruits and vegetables.

Avocados are everywhere, and at low prices.

Bananas are on special most places.

Oranges, grapefruit, lemons and limes just about complete the list of fresh fruits and vegetables offered in Salem markets for today.

Soup Favorite If Appetites Are Keen

During weather when appetites are at their best, good hot soups that border on the stew, are tops in popularity. Two such soups are French bouillabaisse, which takes shellfish, and American pepper pot.

- BOULLABAISSE
3 pounds fish
1/2 cup olive oil
1 dozen whole clams, oysters
1/2 cup shrimp, crab or lobster
2 leek slices
2 large tomatoes or 1 cup canned
2 cups fish stock or water
pinch saffron (important flavor)
Juice 1 lemon
1 bay leaf
2 medium onions, sliced
1 carrot
1/2 cup canned pimiento
1 clove garlic, minced
1 tablespoon dried parsley
Salt

Use flounder, sole, halibut or other white fish. Cook carrot, onion and leeks in olive oil or butter until slightly golden. Add fish, cut in squares, tomato, bay leaf and stock. Simmer for 20 minutes, add shellfish (in shells), pimiento and saffron season to taste, add lemon. To serve, put the toast in a deep dish and add bouillabaisse and sprinkle with parsley. Appetites vary of course, but the recipe suggests that this will serve 8 persons.

George Recker, epicure, chef and writer on foods says "There are probably as many different recipes for pepperpot soup as there are residents of Philadelphia, each one of course is the only authentic recipe handed down from colonial times. To settle the argument about true pepperpot, I will give the genuine formula. It's the recipe that the greatest number of Philadelphians agree on—three in all, counting myself and my wife."

- RECTOR'S PHILADELPHIA PEPPERPOT
4 slices bacon
1 onion
2 green peppers
8 cups soup stock
1/2 pound honeycomb tripe
1 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup cream
1/2 teaspoon pepper
1 bay leaf
sprig of thyme
1 cup diced potatoes
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
Dice bacon and cook in heavy kettle until golden brown. Add onion, green pepper finely chopped and the thyme which has been washed and shredded. Add seasonings, bring to the boiling point add potatoes and simmer for 10 minutes. Blend butter and flour to thicken soup. Add cream just before serving.
