Yeater and Rush In new Location

Appliance Firm so Marks First Anniversary of Operation Here

Removal to new and enlarged quarters at 255 N. Liberty is the way Yeater & Rush company, operated by Douglas Yeater and William "Bill" Rush, marks its first anniversary. The firm is dealer for Westinghouse products in this community. The favorable outlook for the major appliance business in 1939 and the need for greater storage space which would allow larger purchases at savings to be passed on to customers, were cited by the firm as reasons for moving from the original Commercial street location.

A long-term financing arrangement with Electric Home and Farm Authority, making possible monthly payments low enough for the average worker to have a complete electric home with up to four years in which to pay, will be a contributing factor in 1939 sales, Yeater and Rush predicted.

An outstanding accomplishment of the firm in its first year in business was purchase and sale within 90 days of the first solid carload of ranges ever shipped in to Salem. This record received widespread recognition with more than a page write-up in a trade magazine of the electrical industry, "Electric West."

Yeater and Rush recently returned from Portland where they witnessed a preview of the 1939 Westinghouse line. Outstanding feature of the new refrigerator, they pointed out, is the "True Temp" control, an exclusive Westinghouse feature which guarantees a positive degree of temperature inside the refrigerator regardless of outside room temperature. The new "meatkeeper," standard on all models, designed to keep meat without dehydration, also attracted interest the preview, they reported.

Both Yeater and Rush had considerable experience in the major appliance field before embarking on an independent enterprise of their own just a year ago. Yeater's experience dates back over nine years; Rush's for five.

Pocketbook or Your Life-- Which Comes First?

Credit and price. There is a distinct relation between the two. And there is a price below which no man can go. That is true, whether you do a dollar's worth, or a million dollars' worth of business. An unwieldy credit structure means what? It means an increase in operating costs, a piling up of interest, which, when passed on to the consumer hits directly at his pocket-book.

I have gone upon the theory that if care of the teeth was good for anybody, it must be good for everybody. There are no goods on the shelf in the dental profession. And there is nothing to salvage. What you render is service. It is based upon the knowledge, training and skill of those who perform the work. How can you hold out a false lure to a patient, if you know that in the end you will make service more expensive for him, invite his bad will? That spells ruin.

Would I promise more than I could deliver? Or would I encourage a patient by representations of long credit to call, have his teeth attended and then pay whenever he got ready? Not unless I meant to be deliberately dishonest. I would not follow that course and expect to remain in the profession. Nor could I hope to add to any list of satisfied patients. Tactics that savor of the pea and shell racket only breed distrust in the mind of the public, disaster for those who employ them.

If you have been putting off that much needed dental work why not call now and get acquainted with service at a nearby Parker office? You will find them in every leading Pacific Coast city.
