In the spring of 1829, Kit Carson, then 19, first rode with a party of what gold was later to become. brief week Kit knew riches and guard's rifle. brief week Kit knew riches and revelry. At length, "I'll never be such a tarnation fool again," vowed Kit, nor was he. In the fall of 1830 Kit rode again with a band of trappers who followed what would later be the Oregon trail. Snow—and Blackfeet Indians—halted them in the region which was later to heacame part of Wyoming. It was ful. Kit was furious. "That's plain onchristian," he "Saved our scalps, narrer shave!"

Indians. She'll think I'm to blame."

They waited all day and night before the grove, but the chiefless Indians remained hidden. The trappers made litters of long poles and buffalo hides to swing between horses for the wounded men. Trapper-fashion they sucked clean the wounds, bandaging them with the inner bark of sycamore. Jacques, the French Canadian, had been shot in the right leg, evidently with a poison arrow. During the day the limb swelled and discolored.

"That leg's coming off," said Kit grimly.

Even Jacques could not protest. He pulled a deerskin robe over his friends worked to save him. Kit's hunting knife, an ax to break the bone, a blade heated white by fire to cauterize the wound, and the thing was over. When the awrul task was done, Rit was nearly as spent as the man whose life he had saved.

"That's a right smart cache," he ground admiringly.

"That's a right smart cache," he ground next day the cache had be returned next day the cache had be returned next day "Scalper!"

Is said that Welsh words are to be heard in the Modoc dalects of Oregon. Also, what became of the colony founded in 1585 in Virginia by Sir Walter Raleigh, that vanished leaving between the trappers waded into the dam killing the furry toilers with clubs. Kit glanced anxiously at the sun.

"Must be about four o'clock," he said, "No time to skin 'em. We'll cache to any own with the lot and come back tomorrow."

To cache such a large haul required great skill. Kit had learned the art from French Canadian trappers who took it from the Indians. The men dug a pit on the river bank, laid in their beaver, and carefully down feer, feeling only contempt! In this mood she was lindian.

Her knew the trick of it, fighting down feer, feeling only contempt! In this mood she was lindian.

was over. When the awful task was done, Kit was nearly as spent as the man whose life he had saved.

"I seen that done once on the Santa Fé trail," he told the men, "I was a sprout of sixteen and I did the cauterizing. Injun arrows can be more pisoness than a dozen rattlers and Gils monsters put together."

He brought his men safely back to Captain Fitzpatrick's camp on the Arkansas.

Through the remaining months of that winter, thoughts of the scalped chief troubled Kit. To kill an Indian signam was white man's work if the Indian signam agleam.

Said.

But when they returned next day the cache had been rifled—the rich fur was gone. So Kit Carson swore eternal warfare on the Blackfeet tribe. Then Fitzpatrick gave him eleven men and wished him God speed. Over rolling messas and green prairies in this spring of 1832 rode Kit Carson, "The Avenger."

Between criss-cross of buffalo trail he perceived the "Indian sign."

The twelve trappers reached a great village.

"Blackfeet!" said Kit, his eyes agleam.

"Listen here, ma'am," Kit protested, shocked. "I didn't do that to your pa. Scalpin's a dirty Injun trick."

Instantly he was horrified. The blue eyes in the tanned golden face blazed.

"Well, I—" he floundered unhappilly, and backed his half-broken horse away. "We'll be moseying on, ma'am. Beggin' your pardon."

His men stormed after him.

"You can't back out of this, Kit. Cap'n sent us to get even."

Kit reported to Fitzpatrick.

The memory of the beautiful girl continued to puzzle Carson. The Blackfeet was one of the most brutally savage of tribes. What was she doing among them?

And there were more ancient cases. As early as the year 1170, three hundred Welsh men and women came to America. They vanished. But it is said that Welsh words are to be heard in the Modoc dialects of Oregon. Also, what be-And there were more ancient Cap'n sent us to get even."

Kit's answer deepened their in-white men take up the savage practice.

It was the Indian girl's hearing of his he dreaded. Already his men and given him a new title that would be spread throughout the plains, "The Avenger." The taking of that calp would be laid to him. ...

Indian troubles thickened around hem. The death of Red Bear would be avenged by the Blackfeet nation.

"They'll get even with us sure," it told Pitspatrick. "We'd better and a new camp for the spring hunting. Fur will be good after this cold inter and we don't want to spend to time fighting Blackfeet."

So have samped in a spread of this dreams, clad in the white doeskin of a great chief's daughter, wampum in her hair, scorn on her lips. Spokeswoman, this beautiful girl, for her tribe.

She was beautiful, and she had defied him. Riding back to the Green River camp, Kit warred with his thoughts. Probably she was Indian! Probably he was a fool to let her go!

Moving up Green River, the band met the trapper, Antoine Robidoux of the famous family of western traders, and his men. Antoine had been the first fur trader out of old Taos. (The Fort Robidoux, which he founded in 1832 in Colorado, was the pioneer American trading post beyond the Great Divide. Later, with Kit Carson, Antoine would serve as interpreter with General
