US 'Condemns' Hitler's Seizure of Territory

The United States government formally communicated to Germany its stinging "condemnation" of Hitler's seizure of Czechoslovakia as an act of "wanton lawlessness." Secretary of State Sumner Welles (center, facing camera), is shown as he released to Washington, D. C., correspondents the note. countries—or of a group of countries—may be nullified by competition from industry in some other country that might refuse to become party to the agreement, and that in such circumstances it might be necessary for the organizations to obtain the help of their governments, and that the two organizations agreed to collaborate in seeking such help.

Under the trade treaty with the United States the British government cannot give any concessions to Germany in the empire market that she does not give to us, but had this agreement gone into effect the Germans might very well have developed their trade in Brazil, for instance, in agreement with Britain and with British financial aid.

The real dilemma of the Chamberlain government is that it is to a very large extent dominated by British financial and industrial interests, and that these interests, are suffering from a certain myopia, which makes it difficult for them to see clearly the exact state of affairs in the world.

The German financial and industrial interests are a complete instrument of the Nazi national policy and completely under the control of that policy.

But the financial and industrial interests of the democracies have divided allegiances.

The result of last week's political events has been that this agreement is off, but it is by no means out of the question that it quiet settles down temporarily on the European front these negotiations will be resumed.

It is, indeed, somewhat difficult to understand why the British and French governments should have been so suddenly appalled at what is happening in central Europe. After all, it was obvious, and it was indeed agreed upon, that Munich meant for Germany a free hand in the east, and there is nothing whatever new about the Nazi method of using that free hand.

It is quite impossible to believe that the British government should be less able to foresee the inevitable outcome of Munich for Czechoslovakia than a columnist writing in New York.

I am inclined to think that what has really horrified the British is the realization that Mr. Hitler is not striking directly east at Russia but is striking southeast through Rumania, toward the Black Sea and the Dardanelles, where he can meet Mussolini's navy. His route is maybe east—but east toward Iraq, Arabia and India.

This column has always been in favor of the United States having a very active foreign policy, in the complete conviction that it will be impossible for us in the long run to isolate ourselves from the European situation.

But I do not believe that the United States should give its support for nothing or tag along after other countries, but rather make it clear that if it is in this game it wishes to be consulted at every step of the game and not be regarded as the rich uncle who pays the others' gambling debts.
