Rock Crusher to Move to Stayton

The Jackson Hill county rock crusher in the Illhees district will be shut down Thursday or Friday and preparations begun to remove the equipment to a site on the North Santiam river at Stayton, County Commissioner Jim Smith reported yesterday. As the plant is to be overhauled before being set up again, it will be two or three weeks before operations at Stayton will get under way.

Commissioner Smith said several thousands of cubic yards of oil-surfacing rock and ordinary crushed rock had been placed in stock piles from the Jackson Hill operations of the last two years and estimated the supply on hand would serve the southwest corner of the county for at least two years.

Length of the run at the Stayton site is as yet indefinite.
