Library Offers Variety Of Services to Mother

By MISS ELIZABETH CAREY, Children's librarian.

The public library has much to offer parents of pre-school children. They need not wait until children learn to read before introducing them to books. A love of books can be instilled at an early age.

First of all are the books which the mother will want in order to refresh her memory of nursery rhymes. Later she will want illustrated editions of these, such as "The Gay Mother Goose" by Françoise. Everyone is familiar with the action jingle "This little pig went to market," but few know that there are a great many similar games in the book "Finger plays" by Emilie Poulsson.

Next come the picture books with bright illustrations on every page, accompanied by a simple story which the parent can read to the child. For the first books clear pictures without too much detail are best. Small children prefer pictures of familiar things. Avoid fantastic illustrations and garish colors. Even the smallest of children can be taught to handle books carefully.

Among the books which are popular at the library are two old favorites "The Tale of Peter Rabbit" and "Little Black Sambo." A third is the story "Epaminondas," which has just this year been made available in illustrated book form. Among the more recent popular books are those by Marjorie Flack about the various adventures of Angus, a Scottie, and those about William, a small boy. Maj. Lindman, a Swedish author-artist, has
