Removing Spots From Clothing Great Trial;
Suggestions Offered

One of the great trials of a mother is removing the odious oil spots from the baby's clothing. Care of course must be taken not to spill an unnecessary amount for the stain is one of the most difficult to remove. The stain should be treated as soon as possible as old stains are the hardest to remove. Immerse the spot in acetone (from druggist) several times, allowing to dry each time, soak then in soap and water. Rubbing the spot with an acetone soaked rag is not enough to remove the stain.

One ingenious father conceived the idea of using a nipple to give codliver oil to his infant, who was still under the spoon-feeding age. The oil is measured into a regular nipple of a rather large size, reserved for the purpose, and with reasonable care is easily given to the baby who lies down while enjoying his daily vitamins. As oil causes rubber to disintegrate rather quickly, the nipple should not be the regular one used for milk and is a good use for an old nipple that has holes too big for milk or water.
