Sharp Advance Due to Fear of Crop Damage in Kansas Estimate Drops Scorching temperatures were reported yesterday in the southwest and the forecast was for continued clear weather. The government weekly summary indicated rapid deterioration in Nebraska during the week and said damage had been serious in many parts of western Kansas. A leading Kansas elevator company estimated the state's crop at 101,800,000 bushels on the basis of present conditions, or 14,000,0 less than a month ago.

The trade gave increasing attention to the government's recently announced wheat an program. #### Lively Trading Turns Million Shares Stocks

NEW YORK, May 24-(P)-The stock market pulled out of a rut today into the widest advance in six weeks. Without specific imulus in the day's news, many shares rose 1 to 3 points in the heaviest trading since April 12. Transactions totaled 1,013,680 shares against 423,130 in the preceding session.

To some observers, it appeared the rise got much of its impetus from short-covering by fraders who concluded recent action of the market had indicated a "sold-out" condition, and buying on prospect of business improvement later in the year. The upturn in stocks was accompanied by a broad advance in commodities.

Heavy industry, it was suggested, would benefit from the resumption of soft-coal mining. The "Iron-Age" said the boost in steel schedules this week was attributable chiefly to a larger coal supply. Steel makers were reported to have booked big orders during recent cutting of sheet prices.

SYNOPSIS

Marie Alexander, young and un-ophisticated, satiates her longing or romance by corresponding via an she had never seen. When Edrings that he will not care for r. To impress him, she had litten that her mother was an treas, and so she had been years o, but now she conducts a beauty riler in their home on the outlirts of Hollywood. Marie runs a realating library there. The sung couple meet and are mutual-attracted. Out driving, Edward arks his car in a secluded spot and isses her. "You'll be terribly important some day," she tells him, and I wonder if I'll be big enough o play the part." When he asks gs that he will not care for to play the part." When he asks "What part?" She answers, "Your wife!" Marie is humiliated when Edward falters in his response, realizing that she had actually proposed to a man whom she has mown only two days. After that, she tries to steel herself against him but cannot resist his embraces. "You're so splendid-so right-and I'm so slow and afraid-" he says. With that Marie pressed her wet cheek to his. She loved him-nothing else mattered.

She took his two hands in hers.

"Then it's all right, darling! You'll come back. I'll wait for you. Don't you believe that I'll wait for you?"

"Wait for me! My dear, I can't wait! I love you. But I can't stay, either. I've got to get back. I came with those fellows and I've got to go back with them. But before I go we're going to get married. We're going to Las Vegas tomorrow. We—

"Oh, yes, we can. We're going to. You go to get more clearly in the inner hallway.

"EDWARD! Edward—we GAN'T."

"Oh, yes, we can. We're going to. You can tell your mother some."

Kissed the side of his cheek.

"Atta girl," he murmured, but he again!"

Marie lay in her narrow, nest little bed, in the small pink box of her room, and saw everything—her pink dressing table, her pink-flow-ared slipper chair, her white painted dresser, her pink and green and white rag rug—more clearly in the dark, than she'd ever seen them in daylight. Each shadowy familiar place was dear to her, each thing represented some little kindness from her mother or Charlie.

Tou can tell your mother some.

Kissed the side of his cheek.

"Atta girl," he murmured, but he didn't check the speed of the car.

For the first time he seemed to have no desire to drive with ene hand.

They left the sea behind, followed the tree-lined boulevard, turned at last up Dover street. It was dark at 657 except for the porch light, and the faint glow of the lamp in the inner hallway.

He walked up the stairs with her, took her latchkey, opened the door, and held her in his arms for a little mother or Charlie.

Julic had brought the mirrors for the didn't check the speed of the car.
