Food Stamps for Relief Families

Food stamps for relief families

General view of the checkers' desk as food stamps were issued in Rochester, N. Y., by the Federal Surplus Commodities corporation in the New Deal's experiment to have relief families buy surplus farm products. Rochester was selected as the city to be given the first try because its relief problems are "typical." The stamps, orange and blue, are sold together. With the orange stamps, any sort of food may be bought, but with the blue only surplus commodities may be purchased.
