Business Revival Talk Has Little Effect on Mart

7.00 6.60 5.59 5.50 NEW YORK, May 25 .- (A) Traders had a rare chance to cash profits in today's stock market and most took advantage of the opportunity.

After a forenoon's upswing, in which the ticker tape was behind for a brief interval at the opening, the pace slackened appreciably and early gains running to 2 or more points were cut down or replaced with declines in many instances at the close. Despite the hesitation appar ent in the final hour, the Associated Press average of 60 stocks managed to retain a net advance of .1 of 'a point at 46.9. Transfers amounted to 10.010,850 shares compared with 1,013,680 yesterday. At that, it was the second largest day's Sheep: Receipts, salable 400, total 600. Market slow, steady to weak. Price volume since April 12.

Tending to lift speculative sentiment was the statement of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau that congressional leaders had reached an agreement with the president on certain tax alterations which, the official said, would "definitely" contribute to business revival. The market, however, may have discounted this, because there was little or no bulge after receipt of the news in boardrooms.

Further evidence of inflation thinking was noted in connection with unconfirmed reports some administration circles were considering a new spend-lend program. Helpful, also, was ord the anti-monopoly committee had postponed its hearings into financial practices.

son, her best friend at high, who had married the Parker boy last October. She'd gone to the wedding lay there in the sweet half-conhead, she knew in the First Congregational church, with her mother and Charlie. She hadn't wanted Julie to guess that ahe cared that Sheila had chosen had then, as the mocker went on weren't at Riverside at all. But she s bridesmaid but Julie wasn't easy of fool, and she'd been so mad about she'd talked of nothing else all she wasn't all. But she wasn't easy of to chirp in a growing chorus of pladness because the day had come, she'd talked of nothing else all she remembered.

Charlie had been difficult, too. He started to hum as soon as he came up the steps of the church. Churches always hummed when he was nervous, and every time he wiggled, or cleared his throat, she had been afraid he'd start to hum again.

And now she was going to be a bride, and Julie and Charlie wouldn't be there.

Ever since ahe could remember the had thought about love, and getting married, and being a bride. She had seen herself, in slim, white satin, veiled in tule, standing baside the bridegroom at the altar rail. The bridegroom hadn't played a very important part at first. She hadn't thought much about him, except that he had to be there.

Last night's fears had vanished with the night. She was early—but to kill you off driving all day and all might, too."

Marie had thought of Riverside. The inn was so romantic.

"We might go on a little farther," the said.

Edward took another look at Hicksman's one room stucco bungapacked it swiftly and methodically. Powder, brushes, toothpaste, an extra blouse, fresh underwear, her best dilk nightie, a blue silk Japanese kimono with wistaria on it, a pair of blue mules.

Nice, but not very bridal. Not what she'd have if her mother knew that she...

No, she wouldn't think about that the there was a soft freshness and fracted to look it over, "but I don't want to kill you off driving all day and all might, too."
