Project Ready For Last Okeh

Few Changes Are Favored Before Plant Will be Given to City

SILVERTON - Preliminary tests were made Friday at Silverton's new $60,000 sewage disposal plant. Making the tests were Dr. A. W. Simmons, chairman of the water commission under whose management the plant will be placed; Elgin McCleary, superintendent of the water department; John Cunningham of Baar & Cunningham, consulting enginters, and R. A. McClanathan, local engineer.

While the plant was ready so that it was running Friday a few changes were found necessary and a few details must be completed before the plant is turned over to the city. Engineers said Friday that in a week or 10 days, final inspection would be made.

Engineers explained that the process of sewage treatment used in the Silverton treatment plant is sedimentation and separates sludge digestion, with sludge dried on sand beds, followed by a trickling filter, secondary sedimentation of the effluent, and chlorination.

Filter Interesting Of most interest to visitors, those in charge reported, is the strange looking trickling filter, with its 2800 yards of gravel on an 80-foot bed. The gravel, through which the sewer filters is six feet deep.

A nicely arranged small laboratory is a part of the plant. A Health, Cooking, Room byline is so arranged that should anything go wrong with the plant, the sewage can be turned into the creek at once without entering the plant.

"Work on the project was started on December 1 as a PWA project with a $27,000 federal grant. The thought of the plant originated with the Silverton old dump ground.

The water department will supervise the new project after it is turned over to the city. 'A dual bookkeeping system has been set bookkeeping up within the commission and first bills will probably be issued July 1. The exact rate remains yet to be worked out. The plant yet to be worked out. The plant will run approximately two hours a day and a man will be employed employed at the water office to project operation.

Miss Inga Thorkildson is now tailed.
