Sabre Tooth End Not Fault of Man

CORVALLIS, Ore., June 3.—(AP)—The sabre-tooth tiger probably became extinct without any help from man, Regional Biologist Stanley Jewett told the Pacific Northwest Bird and Mammal society at Oregon State college today.

Zany Handed a Jolt

Ginger Rogers has built up an ideal in Fred Astaire, imagining him a star performer in the Broadway production of "The Heacpecks." She visits the show and is stunned to find that he only plays a slapstick stooge to Lew Fields. Going backstage, she taunts him for wasting his talents, pulls off his putty nose and flings it at him. It is a dramatic moment in RKO Radio's lavish musical, "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle," starting today at the Elsinore theatre, plus second hit, "Society Lawyer," with Virginia Bruce and Walter Pidgeon.

Eleven-year-old Virginia Weidner, playing the "ornariest" cowed in Arizona, teaches Andy Hardy all there is to know about bucking broncos and equally hazardous rodeo tricks in "Out West With the Hardys," one of the series of adventures surrounding the beloved "Hardy Family" of the films. The picture opens Sunday at the Hollywood theatre with Lewis Stone, Cecilia Parker, Fay Holden and all the other familiar "Hardy" faces present. On the same program, Bob Hope and Shirley Ross in "Thanks For The Memory."

Hardy Family in Wide Open West

Andy Finds His Nemesis in Comedy Showing at Hollywood

Choosing the wild open space as the locale for their varied adventures in romance and typical American life, the Judge Hardy family returns to the screen again in "Out West With the Hardys," which comes to the Hollywood theatre today. This picture is the fifth in the series on this average American family and carried on with the same stars in another action-filled episode of their colorful doings. The story is replete with hilarious comedy, human and heart-warming pathos, and trials and tribulations. The family goes west as guests on a huge ranch where Mickey Rooney as Andy Hardy finds his nemesis in a little western girl, played by Virginia Weidner, eleven-year-old actress. He leaves Polly (Ann Rutherford) behind in the city but returns to her in the end. Meanwhile Judge Hardy (Lewis Stone) finds his mettle tested in keeping the family together and to solve the mystery of some lost water rights. Marian Hardy (Cecilia Parker) again falls in love, this time with the ranch foreman with Gordon Jones in this role. She also eventually returns to her Carvel boy friend, Don Castle. The picture, as in the case of all previous Hardy pictures, was directed by George Seitz.

Elsinore Runs 'Castle' Story

Ginger Rogers and Astaire Are Ideally Cast to Portray Dancers Adhering closely to the real-life story of Vernon and Irene Castle, world-famous dancing team of a quarter century ago, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers' new co-starring vehicle, "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle" starting today at the Elsinore theatre, is reported to be the finest musical film of recent years and the greatest of all the pictures in which these two favorites have teamed.

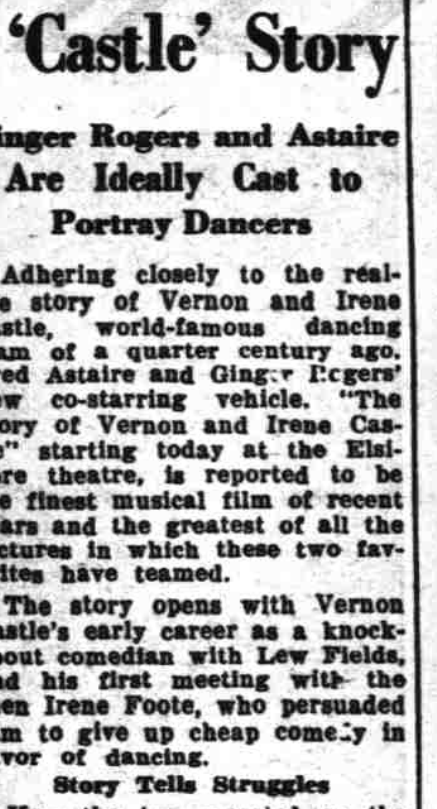

The story opens with Vernon Castle's early career as a knock-about comedian with Lew Fields, and his first meeting with the then Irene Foote, who persuaded him to give up cheap comedy in favor of dancing.

How the two married on the proverbial shoestring, went to Paris and nearly starved before they got a start as a team, is revealed in delightful fashion. Their meteoric rise to fame in dance engagements which took them across two continents until their reputation was established as the outstanding dance duo of their time; the breaking up of the team when Vernon enlisted with the British forces on the outbreak of the World war; and his untimely death in a Texas air crash, are main ingredients in a story which is depicted in impressive and tuneful fashion against typical backgrounds of the period.
