Small Business Loans Bill

Some months ago it was pointed out here that the federal government had "captured" the banks of this country by the odd though scarcely unique measure of becoming their predominant debtor.

The difference between this and the FHA is not difficult to find. The home loans are based upon the solid security of the house and lot, with fire insurance protection against the one probable hazard that would impair the security.

It is not the province of government to risk the public credit in such enterprises. There would have to be some restrictive rules and inevitably those would close the door on the type of investment that is most needed.

The suggestion of Mr. Berle of the state department goes further in that it would empower the proposed credit agency to loan both for such enterprises and for "nonproductive purposes."

The proposal is made in response to an admitted need. But the sound solution, the only practical solution, is for government to show a sincere interest in the needs of business and a willingness to promote those needs.

Softball Season Looms

In this centennial year of the great American game of baseball, there should be more than the usual regret in Salem that the game is almost extinct as an adult pastime here.

The advantages include softball's suitability to a greater number of players. Participation of a more or less self-gratifying nature is not limited to a gifted, well-trained few.

After all, the competition's the thing. Last fall, after the New York Yankees had won another American league pennant and another world series with pitiful ease, there were demands that the super-team be broken up to equalize this year's contest.

Civil Liberties Upheld

A speaker at the Washington state convention of Young Democrats the other day said that "the average American doesn't give a whoop for the constitution."

Even if the Young Democrat has slight regard for the constitution, it is still functioning and its civil liberty provisions were brought into prominence in recent days through the decision of the supreme court holding Jersey City's ordinances "regulating" assembly to be unconstitutional.

The decision held that this right of assembly may be regulated, is not "absolute but relative," but cannot "in the guise of regulation, be abridged or denied."

Actually the supreme court's decision had been confidently expected by the great majority of citizens, and it coincides with their beliefs—including those of many who have no use for the CIO.

The New Dealers are snickering at the outcome of the republicans' "national debt week." For one thing, they declare nobody would have heard about it if President Roosevelt hadn't mentioned it in his talk to the retailers.

Bits for Breakfast

By R. J. HENDRICKS

Champoeg as it was 6-10-39 In 1851, when the seven Indian tribes there sold the Willamette valley to U.S.

(Concluding from yesterday.) The regular reader will recall that the seven tribes or bands of Indians which at Champoeg in 1851 sold the lands of the Willamette valley to the United States government were these: Santiam band of the Calapoosias, Tualatin branch of the same "nation," Luckiamutes, Calapoosias, Molallias, upper branch of the same, and the Clackamas tribe.

The first tribe of Indians are the Kallamooks, on the left bank, on a small stream of the same name, 30 miles from its mouth: 2nd are Keowewallahs, alias Tammeewata or Willamath. This tribe, now nearly extinct, was formerly very numerous, and lived at the falls of the river, 32 miles from its mouth, on the right bank.

Mr. Slacum was rather mixed on the Kallamooks, and the stream of the same name. Meaning the Tillamooks, of course not in the Willamette valley.

But Mr. Slacum, in helping organize the cattle company, did early Oregon great good. The $500 of his own money he put into the company paid his heirs a profit. He aided Jason Lee at Philadelphia in his missionary campaign of 1838-9, raising money for Oregon missions.

And Lee lost his job on account of the selfishness and infinite smallness of missionaries working under him who were far from fit for their holy calling, and lost his life on account of the tuberculosis he contracted from killing work and dangerous exposure in the lines of duty.

The final words of the rare Gibbs pamphlet under discussion above, of which perhaps not more than five copies have reached or will reach Oregon, follow:

"During subsequent years, until his departure from the Pacific coast late in 1850, Gibbs' interest in the Indians continued. He made vocabularies among the native tribes scattered over a wide region, and gathered ethnological material in California, Oregon and Washington, on Puget sound and far over the Columbia. As such material was at that time so plentiful, it is evident that he selected choice specimens to be carried, or sent, to his home in New York. If all the materials thus collected could be brought together, it would prove of special interest as representing the work of tribes then living in their primitive state, maintaining manners and customs that had been followed and practiced for generations, but which were soon to be lost or changed through contact with those who came to claim and occupy the country.

The new pamphlet overlooks some phases of the interesting career of George Gibbs. The Dictionary of American Biography shows he was a grandson of Oliver Wolcott, the great second secretary of the United States treasury, succeeding Alexander Hamilton. Also that he was collector of the port of Astoria, Oregon, under President Fillmore, 1850-2. Also, that Gibbs was employed on the international boundary survey, to establish the western end of the line between the United States and Canada.

Also, that his writings, as a young man, included two volumes of memoirs of the administrations of George Washington and John Adams, presidents of the United States, including a great deal of their correspondence with his grandfather, Oliver Wolcott, furnishing to history important and interesting matter that might otherwise have been lost.

Also, the newly published rare pamphlet overlooks specific mention of the labors of Gibbs in connection with Father Pandosa, son of a French admiral, great pioneer priest with the Yakimas. Pandosa helped Gibbs with matter concerning the study of the Yakima and related dialects.

He married his cousin.

Corpus Christi Feast Sunday

To Celebrate Solemn High Mass at 10 a.m. at Mt. Angel

MT. ANGEL-The feast of Corpus Christi will be celebrated Sunday, June 11, with the usual public procession through the streets of the town. The actual feast was June 8, but the celebration of the feast is always transferred to the following Sunday.

A solemn high mass will be celebrated in St. Mary's church at 10 a. m. Immediately after the mass the congregation will form in the following order: Altar boys carrying crosses, school children, Young Ladies' Sodality, Young Men's Sodality, Foresters, Knights of Columbus, Holy Name society, St. Ann's society, Women Foresters, Catholic Daughters, St. Joseph Verein, band, choir, flower girls, altar boys, clergy and celebrant carrying the blessed sacrament, and the men and women of the parish not affiliated with a society.

Order of March Leaving the church, the procession will march down Charles street to the city hall where the first altar is to be erected. From there it will continue down Charles to Main and back up College street to the church, stopping at the Henry Saalfeld and Otto Oswald residences for the second and third benedictions. St. Mary's choir, directed by Rev. Placidus Puerari, and accompanied by the Mt. Angel band will sing throughout the marching and at each stop at the altars. Little girls in wreaths and veils will strew flowers before the priest carrying the blessed sacrament. Firemen will keep the streets clear of traffic.

Quiet Title Suit Started by Fords

Suit to quiet title to the Bligh hotel property, State street, was filed in circuit court yesterday by Bert T. and Margaret G. Ford, who recently purchased it from Chester G. Murphy for an unannounced consideration. The hotel is located on the east one-half of lot 5, block 21, Salem. Benjamin E. Hayward and others were named as defendants.

Hanna denied being the aggressor or damaging the automobile. Davis and Gerald Freeman and Reinhold Herzberg, who accompanied him to the Hanna farm near Roberts station the morning of May 31, all asserted Hanna struck the Davis car with a piece of iron and knocked off the license plate bracket.

Autoist Is Rapped By Novel Penalty

Autoist Vernon Kessler, of Turner, was grounded by Municipal Judge A. Warren Jones in a unique manner yesterday. Kessler, arrested shortly after 2 a. m. yesterday morning by a city officer who charged him with failure to stop at the scene of an accident and with operating a motor vehicle without an operator's permit, had his right to procure a license suspended for one year when he pleaded guilty in municipal court.

Asks Trade Aid

Harrison S. Eccles, chairman of the federal reserve board, is shown as he told a senate banking subcommittee of his proposal to use part of the profits from gold devaluation as a "cushion" for a liberal new system of loans to small business to help fill a "gap in our financial mechanism" that retards small and medium-sized business and industry.

Family Argument In Justice Court

Hanna Case Goes Under Advisement in Judge Hayden's Court

A family argument that ended with flailing fists and a blow delivered with a broom was aired in justice court yesterday when W. G. Hanna went on trial on charges of assault and battery upon his nephew, Evan Davis, and of malicious damaging of Davis' automobile. The case was taken under advisement by Judge Miller B. Hayden.

Hanna denied being the aggressor or damaging the automobile. Davis and Gerald Freeman and Reinhold Herzberg, who accompanied him to the Hanna farm near Roberts station the morning of May 31, all asserted Hanna struck the Davis car with a piece of iron and knocked off the license plate bracket.

Capitol Gives George, Elizabeth Royal Welcome

Proceeded by rambling tanks and flanked by heavily armed coast service men and motorcycle police, the automobiles bearing President Roosevelt and King George VI of England, and Mrs. Roosevelt and Queen Elizabeth, are shown as they moved along Constitution Avenue, Washington, DC, where last two miles, behind steel cables and back of marines and soldiers some 400,000 persons shouted a welcome to the royal couple. In the distance is the capitol.
