Progress or Reaction?

The real issue in tomorrow's school election, as it appears to this paper, is that of progress or reaction. Grant that the present members who are seeking reelection are sincere in their desire to maintain good schools in Salem, their decisions on critical matters over the term of years indicate either a lack of understanding or a deficiency of vision in the administering of school affairs. The result is that the schools have not made the progress they should have in late years.

Such matters as dropping a qualified elementary school supervisor, ignoring the recommendation of the superintendent in the selection and placing of principals and teachers, and finally the dropping of a trained school executive as superintendent are unfortunate evidences that the attitude of the two members who seek reelection is distinctly reactionary. In consequence Salem's reputation as an educational center has been grievously impaired over the northwest.

Add to this the existing lack of harmony on the board which is bound to continue if these members are returned and the weight of reason, it seems to The Statesman, is on the side of the younger, newer men who are candidates.

We have no desire to hash old controversies. We are more concerned with the future than with the past.

The district is starting a new year with a new school superintendent. The time is propitious to start it also with two strong, capable school directors. This paper endorses Roy Harland and Don Young for the school board.

Speeding Ambulances

The tragedy in Portland a few days ago which snatched out the life of a beautiful young university woman justifies the old campaign of The Statesman against racing, screeching ambulances. The car which this young woman was driving was crashed into by a speeding ambulance, which witnesses say ignored a red stoplight, and she lost her life.

Why was the ambulance speeding? It was rushing to get a man to the hospital who had been hit over the head with a beer bottle in a brawl.

The Statesman has frequently urged that such speed is not justified, that the saving of split seconds rarely is the margin between life and death, and that the hazard of life through a fresh accident is greater than the risk by slower delivery of the first victim to the hospital. The Portland incident amply proves this claim. What good is it to rush a person to the hospital if in the race some one else is killed or injured and the patient in the ambulance subjected to fresh injury himself?

What is required is not so much new law as improved practice among ambulance drivers. In this city there has been such an improvement in ambulance driving since this paper has commented on the subject from time to time. Not so often do ambulance sirens make the night hideous as they need to hospitals. The campaign however needs to be extended to other cities. Police officers can help by reuking offenders. It is a matter of education, and we are confident the operators of ambulance services will take note of this tragedy and caution their drivers that speed at the risk of life is wholly unnecessary, and siren-shrieks for the sake of noisy advertising unnecessary.

Sunspots now Diminishing

The seriousness with which the sunspot theory of human behavior was advanced in this column recently in connection with an analysis of stock market ups and downs was really, you understand, a matter of relativity. The sun is, after all some 93 million miles away, even though it provides the earth with 646,000 horsepower of energy per square mile. The theory of a variation in certain important rays affecting humans' attitudes and decisions seemed reasonable only in comparison to the more immediate explanations offered by market experts for Wall street fluctuations—although an eminent astronomer visiting here last summer considered it seriously though tentatively.

But in case some reader intends to chart the future by the sunspot cycle, be it explained that up to the present it has not been possible to predict the future course of sunspots with scientific accuracy. There is an irregular cycle, both as to time and relative intensity; the sunspots have reached maximum incidence, at intervals averaging 11 years.

However, an associate professor and a freshman student at Princeton university have just completed to their own satisfaction the development of a method of predicting sunspots six years in advance—beyond that, they say, it is impossible to forecast.

The most recent outbreak of sunspots began in 1933 and reached its peak in 1937, a year in which more sunspots were observed than at any time since 1870. The index number for 1937 was 114; in 1938 it had dropped to 100. The Princeton men say the decrease will continue steadily until 1944. About that year a new outbreak will occur and reach its peak about 1948. Their method of computation is based upon a complicated mathematical formula which their records prove is capable of being extended for a short period into the future.

Sunspots consist of huge whirlwinds in the sun's surface gases, some of them exceeding the earth in area. They are believed to eject streams of corpuscles with high velocities into space. The sun gives off slightly more heat when there are many sunspots than when there are few. That they affect radio transmission and have some relation to the northern lights, is now generally agreed. There has been some serious effort to prove a connection between heavy incidence of sunspots and the prevalence of suicides, depressions and wars, but the proof and the scientific explanation, if there is such connection, must be left to the future.

The MacLeish Question

There seem to be three facts pretty well established about this man Archibald MacLeish, nominated for librarian of congress. (1) He is a good poet. (2) He is not a librarian (3) He is a "fellow traveler" which means a communist who works outside the party.

The odd part about the opposition to his appointment—opposition which seems pretty nearly unanimous except perhaps for some poets, communists and President Roosevelt—is that approximately half is based on his lack of library training and half on his asserted communism. Few of the objectors have mentioned both points, and none has based objection specifically on point No. 1, that he is a poet.

Perhaps that is because the people who object to poets are not adept at writing prose letters to the press.

Missouri Society Picnic Set Today

The Missouri state society of Portland will hold its annual picnic today at Justice Beach amusement park. This is an annual event that all Missourians look forward to with interest. The chairman of this year's picnic is W. F. Van Hoor, 4125 North Mississippi avenue, Portland.

land, who is using every effort to make this an outstanding event. The gates will be open at 10 a. m. The picnic lunch will be at noon. Coffee, sugar and cream will be provided free. The entertainment feature of the picnic will start at 2 p. m. Some of the highlights will be the famous Ivy Southern Harmonizers, colored singers; the Missouri glee club of Portland; the Purvis family of musicians of Salem; and the old-time fiddlers' contest.

Bits for Breakfast

By R. J. HENDRICKS

Lieut. Slaughter, the man 6-18-33 mentioned by General Grant, was a good and brave soldier; killed by Indians of Kanakut.

(Continuing from yesterday.) A note in connection with the proposal to name what became Kitsap county Slaughter county, Washington, in the Pacific Northwest history, page 508, volume 1, reads: "First Lieutenant William A. Slaughter, 4th Infantry, U. S. Army, graduated at West Point in the class of 1848. No officer of the army ever came to Fort Steilacoom who so endeared himself to the citizens of the territory as did this gallant and enterprising gentleman. From the breaking out of the Indian war till his untimely death on the night of the 18th of December, 1855, when a night attack was made upon his little camp by Kanakut, chief of the hostile Kikikats, who fired the fatal shot, he distinguished himself for his gallant conduct." (The bill for the act creating Kitsap county and its introduction, the name of Slaughter county.)

The Pacific Northwest history mentions the order that Mrs. Victor recited. Chief Kamiakim of the Yakimas had brought about the assassination of Indian Agent A. J. Bolan and other white men.

Major Haller, U. S. Army, had, on order, left The Dalles on October 3, 1855, with 100 regulars, "ending" as the Pacific Northwest history recites "to effect a junction with Lieutenant Slaughter, U. S. Army, who, with 40 United States troops, had left Fort Steilacoom Sept. 27, 1855, for the Yakima country, via Naches pass. The orders of Major Haller were to demand the murderers of Bolan, and chastise the Yakimas."

But, as the regular reader of this column knows, Haller had been killed disastrously by the Yakimas; saved from complete annihilation by the help of Capt. D. A. Russell, who went to his aid with his command. The D. A. Russell who afterward had charge of Fort Yamhill, and was F. H. Sheridan's greater friend, was the son of the Oregonian, where Major General Sheridan was in supreme command and Major General Russell had a division, and was killed while carrying out an order "that was the high point of the winning battle, for the Union side. (Sheridan, on the Indian side, was to scrap, his command near that of Russell.)

Those events were parts of the beginnings of the war of the allied Indian tribes to stop the white wagon immigration and wipe out the whole white race, beginning in 1855, at near the same time, from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean. Says the Pacific Northwest history:

"Lieutenant Slaughter, having heard of the reverse of Haller, and that he had returned to The Dalles, recrossed the Cascade mountains and fell back to a prairie on White river, to await further orders and for reinforcements."

Lieutenant Slaughter, with 40 United States regulars, was encamped on White River prairie, where, on the 21st, he had been joined by Captain Maloney with 75 United States Infantry. They remained there until the 24th. On October 21st (1855), the party was fired upon from an ambush near White river; and Messrs. Moses and Miles were instantly killed. (They were members of an expedition party bringing news and orders.)

"Upon the recovery of their bodies they were found shockingly mutilated. (Such practices by the Indians, which were general, helped fan the hatreds of the white soldiers and civilians.)

After severe suffering and hardships, the surviving members of the party succeeded in reaching the settlements. . . . No sooner had the force under Captain Maloney left Fort Steilacoom for the country than the Indians west of the mountains evinced unmistakable evidence that they were disaffected; that they were well apprised of the movements of the hostile Yakimas in close communication with them. The various sections erected block houses and otherwise placed themselves in a posture of defense. . . . To avoid complications as to rank between the regiment of Oregon volunteers commanded by Colonel Nesmith and the regulars commanded by Major G. H. Rains, U. S. Army, the latter was appointed brigadier general of Washington Territory; volunteers by Acting Governor or Major.

"Corroborative of the fact that a general combination of Indians had been formed against the settlers of the (Puget) Sound was the horrible massacre of a number of families upon White river, in King county. . . . Christopher C. Hewitt, afterward chief justice of the territory, captain of the company raised at Seattle, in a letter dated Nov. 5, (1855) thus communicated the sickening intelligence: "We started Monday, Oct. 29, for the scene of act. After two days' hard work we made the house of Mr. Cox, which we found robbed. We next went to Mr. Jones, whose house we found burned to the ground; and Mr. Jones, being sick at the time, was burnt in it. The body of Mrs. Jones was found some 30 yards from a house, shot through the lower part of the lungs, her face and jaws horribly broken and mutilated, apparently with the head of an axe. The bones of Mr. Jones were found, the flesh having been roasted and eaten off by dogs. Mr. Cooper, who had lived with Mr. Jones, was found about 150 yards from the house, shot through the lungs."

The letter went on with such sickening details of wholesale murder, desecration and incendiarism, says a paragraph in the book, "The territory of Washington had reached a critical period in its history. An active enemy was the field composed of malcontents from a number of the tribes."

Letters From Statesman Readers

To the Editor—

In order to promote the sound principles and to secure and continue harmony and cooperation in our schools, it is necessary that the voters of school district no. 24 re-elect Mr. Bradford and Mr. Neptune, the two retiring members of the school board. These men are businessmen and their experience in life add in business and the efficient service which they have rendered as members of the school board has made them familiar not only with the educational problems of the schools but also with every business detail which is so essential in economically conducting the business of the district. Also as representative men they are personally interested in the problems of both teachers and students, in the betterment of the schools, and in the advancement of the whole educational system.

In order to maintain harmony there must be cooperation between the superintendent and the school board. Bennett was elected superintendent by the unanimous vote of the board and in justice to Mr. Bennett, we should continue in effect that board which will work with him to the best interest of our schools.

The present majority members of the board have started certain reforms which when completed will not only raise the school standards but will save thousands of dollars per year.

Voters—let us go to the polls next Monday and vote to "Support Our School Board." Re-elect Mr. Bradford and Mr. Neptune—and let us not elect them by just a few votes but by an overwhelming majority.

H. William Thielsen

To the Editor:

Recently the press, including The Statesman, has published extensive data, purporting to represent the rate reductions brought about during the year, and through the alleged "regulation" of the Public Utility Commissioners of Oregon. Such "news" is nothing more than propaganda.

If you are interested in advising your readers truthfully, you will investigate and based upon any unbiased, fair-minded survey, you will find that practically ALL rate reductions and progressive improvement in rural line extension policies, in Oregon have been a direct result of, and were "voluntarily" made by, and were "voluntarily" made by, respective power companies, for political expediency, in the face of a campaign involving some phase of public ownership of the utilities. We contend, without fear of contradiction, that, had Oregon never created any public utility commission, and established no logrolled "regulation" the rates today, as a result of the frequent and repeated political battles, still would be just about what they are. Even the executives of the power trust will so admit "of record."

Each succeeding campaign has brought rate reductions and improved policies of rural line extensions. This month, with the Mountain States Power company just emerging from a protracted bankruptcy proceedings, yet in the face of a PUD campaign in Linn county and other counties in that area, they are making a very substantial rate reduction. It is about time that the long-suffering utility investors, if come to the realization that if they are ever to realize anything at all, it will be if and when the public acquires the existing systems, and the proceeds of the sale price (whatever it may be) divided among the security holders. How much longer will they be "suckers" who provide the finances for the campaign to defeat public ownership?

HERMAN E. LAFKY.

Hour of Triumph

Francis Aileck and "Imp"

It's the hour of triumph for Francis Aileck, blind student at Syracuse university, as he and his seeing eye dog, "Imp," who has guided him in his travels to and from the university, take part in graduation exercises on the campus. The "Imp" also was granted a diploma, which is being carried.

streets. So far, with cool weather, the crop has been pretty well in hand but any change will complete the ripening of trees in a hurry.

According to McBain, the itinerant pickers have not responded to the need as much as was expected, consequently the situation may become acute if more college volunteer on Monday morning.

To Keep Capitol Open on Sundays

Oregon's new capitol will be kept open on Sundays from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. throughout the summer months as a result of a large number of requests from the public for an opportunity to inspect the building, it was decided Saturday by secretary of State Earl Snell.

Guide services will be provided during those hours and visitors will be taken on a complete tour of the building. Delegates to the state Lions club convention will be guests of Snell Sunday and with Oregon mail carriers now in convention here will be escorted through the capitol by Boy Scouts trained for guide service.

Governor Learns Laws of Budget Are Very Strict

Governor Charles A. Sprague, despite his high position, must comply with the laws governing the state budget department along with all other state officials, it was revealed Friday.

The governor recently drove his private automobile to southern Oregon, placed it in a public garage over night and included a 50 cent storage charge in his expense account.

David Eccles, state budget director and an appointee of the governor, refused to approve the item. Eccles explained that the law prohibits payment of expenses for storing private cars.

Had the governor stored a state-owned car he would have been entitled to reimbursement. Governor Sprague smiled as Eccles "blue pencilled" the storage item.

Hundreds Needed To Pick Cherries

Royal Couple to Marry

Marriage of Princess Irene of Greece and the Duke of Spoleto, nephew of the king of Italy, is expected soon. Their engagement was announced May 27.
