Soule to End Work July 1

Makes Envious Record as Water Superintendent Past 20 Years

WOODBURN—E. N. Soule will retire on July 1, ending 20 years of faithful service as superintendent of the Woodburn water works. Soule and his family moved to Woodburn 27 years ago from Lacombe. Before taking over the duties as superintendent, Mr. Soule worked in the engine rooms of the paper mill in Oregon City. On July 2, 1919, Mr. Soule started in as superintendent of the water works, succeeding the late Peter Chapelle.

At the start of his service, the water works were in poor financial standing and Soule even had to use his own tools to work with. Since then the water works has increased and prospered until now at his retirement, the works are completely paid for and out of debt with a surplus of funds on hand.

During his 20 years of service, all the old wooden water pipes and mains in the city have been replaced with cast iron pipes; a new well costing $1700 was drilled; new pumping machinery costing $2600 was purchased; and last summer a new pump house costing nearly $4000 was built and is one of the finest buildings the city owns. With all the pumps working and pumping from the three wells, it is able to pump 900 gallons a minute.

Until last November Soule had been on the job every day, including Sundays and holidays, except for one month when he took a trip back east.

Mr. Soule is 77 years of age and is most commonly known around the town as Daddy Soule. Up until a little over a year ago he used to climb up to the top of the water tank which is 135 feet high but since then an assistant has done this. When he became ill last November it was the first time in 52 years he had been sick in bed and since he has recovered his job as superintendent has been along the supervising line.
