Oregon Newspaper Honored

There are more than 5000 weekly newspapers published wrote a series of article... in the United States, and selection out of all this number as the "best all-around weekly" in the nation is an honor that is they are now the property of worthy of attention. This honor has come to the McMinnville Mrs. Floy L. Bea lish, whose Telephone Register, according to an announcement from the mother was Mary Halley, daugh-National Editorial association which made the selection, Jud- ter of John Minto, The home Rational Editorial association when made the selection, such of Mrs. Beamish is on a piece of the Minto donation land claim, fronting the (.ld) Pacific

It was announced at the same time that the Hood River highway, about six miles south News was awarded first place for its editorial page, and that or Salem. the Hillsboro Argus won second place in the classified advertising contest, won an honorable mention for general excellence and along with the Telephone Register, was in the finals in the production contest. The Telephone Register won history, and interpret more of honorable mention in the special edition contest, its entry being an edition of last October commemorating McMinnville's ferent versions from what the progress in the utility field.

In the winning of honors such as these there are always at least two factors; the newspaper publishers and their John Minto was an honest man, staff, and the community whose support makes the production and seldom mistaken concernof such a newspaper possible. In the case of the Telephone Register, Publisher Lars F. Bladine and Editor Jack Bladine are modestly disposed to give all the credit to the community; but the years of experience in newspaper building which they brought to the McMinnville field, and the diligence and enterprise with which they have carried on there, are factors which no one is going to ignore. They and their co-workers deserve all of the honor which has come to them.

It is however significant that so many of the national honors in this year's contests came to Oregon newspapers. Mc-Minnville, as well as Hood River and Hillsboro, is a city in which a high degree of community spirit and pride is plainly evident to every visitor. Oregon cannot claim a monopoly in show that the very poor people these respects, but it can point to these and other cities in are often contributors to great which civic pride is not only strong but is aimed at constructive achievement—just the sort of atmosphere in which it is the ordinary motive of each beteasiest to attain excellence in a type of endeavor which in- tering his worldly condition. volves public cooperation.

The Statesman joins other newspapers in Oregon in congratulating not only Lars and Jack Bladine of McMinnville. a great degree, cognizant of the Hugh Ball of Hood River and Verne McKinney of Hillsboro, a great national object, at the but also the people of those communities, upon the honors same time they were animated by they have won.

"His life was bleak and full of grief, which seldom knew an hour's relief, but when they placed him in his grave the populace began to rave about the merits of his work, and every weary bookstore clerk was selling Gissing all the day and loading him

Thus did Walt Mason, the Rippling Rhymster, describe the fate of a contemporary scribbler. But Mason's life was short autobiography will be the not like that. He wrote daily for the millions, with an assured income, an assured public and no worries as to whether some publisher was going to accept his work.

The Clam's Fight Technique

At Empire on the southern Oregon coast the clams are proving their worth as rat exterminators. It seems, according to the Coos Bay Harbor, that those big five-inch clams that inhabit the Empire beach have formed the habit of lying in wait in most un-clamlike fashion, with their mouths open. When Mr. Rat comes along and pokes his head in, Mr. Clam closes his shell abruptly, clamping down on the rodent's head and holding tight until the marauder is dead.

A youth named Bryce Powell and a man named Jesse for this reason, in all efforts williams were witnesses to the act, according to the Harbor; amongst the class with whom his they brought the clam, with the rat's head held firmly, to the newspaper office, but just before they were ready to take a picture, the clam's jaws loosened and the rat dropped to the

The clam's close-mouthed habit has been for decades an example to the human race. We have assumed that the clam was the outstanding minder of his own business. Therefore children and youth, he was chothis technique of open-mouth invitation to attack comes to our attention as something of a shock. It may be something so to the owners and state the new, inspired by President Roosevelt's international policy.

One important annual event is wiped off the nation's calendar, much to the chagrin of the editors and columnists. Fin-land was in the habit of paying an installment and interest on its "war debt" to the United States once each year, and it was always good for a paragraph or six. As a matter of fact Finland wasn't in the war and never ewed the United States about the age of 5 till near m awar debt, but that never bothered the paragraphers. Now the last installment of the debt, whatever it was, is paid.

The proposed code of ethics for radio broadcasters for-bids any unkind remarks about the lame, blind or deaf, or any race or creed—and that is a laudable attitude. But think how many more people would be protected if it forbade poking fun at the lame-brained.

John Minto, Oregon pioneer, a factor of history in its making; in the '44 immigration; an American by glorious choice:

For 13 issues of the Willamette Farmer, Salem, the first May 8 and the ast July 31, 1885, John Minto, one of the leading men of the important 1844 (second large) covered wagon immigration to Oregon,

These articles, in the rather torn and time worn clippings, tell a good deal of early Oregon the annals of this state and secmore or less standard historians have written; and this columnist believes, true versions-for ing matters which came under his observation.

So, though this will make a long series for this column, the writer believes the pace will be justified; for thus will what appears here become a part of the recorded, preserved, permanent historical annals of the important epoch covered. The Minto correspondence begins:

"The reasons for writing what follows are in the hope that some portions of it will tend to results, and are not always without great motives, joined with
