tion, and indications that "two of the most astute political pay-consequent inequalities in the distribution of wealth. She strongly denounced repudiation of national debts, or currency inflation. She signalled out the reciprocal trade treaties of the Roosevelt administration as particularly unfortunate for the American farmer and trader. "There is no point in high prices for farm products," she declared, "if there is no market at home for the goods to be sold."

In her concluding remarks the national committeewoman declared that "America has always meant a cooperative endeavor. Labor and capital must progress together; one can not do without the other." This she opposed to what she termed the increase of class feeling under the present administration which has resulted in the opposition of capital to labor, the growth of schism in the ranks of labor, and a lack of sympathy between the forces of labor and the public.

Prior to Miss Martin's address, Rep. Hannah Martin introduced prominent republicans present. The meeting was opened by the singing of "God Bless America" by Mrs. Gladys Thomas, accompanied by Miss Alice Cray Brown.

Portland Cops in Moving Business

Officers Need Trucks to Haul Away Loot of Pair Arrested

PORTLAND, Ore., July 19-(P)—It was moving day for Portland police today following arrest of Lewis Lafollett, 18, and his companion, LeRoy Dolson, 18, on burglary charges.

Officers backed trucks to an old dwelling in southwest Portland and carted away goods, loot of some 20 robberies by a youth whose practice of carting his way away in pillow slips gained him the sobriquet of the "Pillow Slip Burglar."

Detectives Roy Ripley and Perry Belleu said $3000 worth of stuff, ranging from golf balls and jewelry to clothing and radios, were stored in the house where Lafollett lives alone.

Dolson was arrested when he appeared at detective headquarters to see Lafollett. Questioned, he told Detectives Glenn Howell and John McColloch he had aided Lafollett since July.

Lafollett's 18-year-old girl companion, Frances Lewis, was held by the district attorney. The youth denied the girl participated in any of the robberies although he said she sometimes waited for him in an automobile.

Late today officers checked article by article, the golf tees, tennis racquets, guns, clocks, motion picture sets, tennis balls and dozens of items against a six-month-old robbery report.

No Strike Due At Art Center

17 WPA Workers There to Remain at Posts Members Assert

The 17 WPA workers at the Salem Art Center will remain at their work, although a one-day walkout demonstration is planned for today by workers throughout the state. The 13 resident and four loaned WPA workers included in the office and teaching staff of the Art Center are pleased with their working conditions and see no reason for a protest, said members of the staff when questioned yesterday.

The changes in wage scales means less to those employed at the Center than other workers, as most employes locally are on a 120-hour schedule already and only 19 hours will be added to their present working scale in order for them to maintain the same wage.

Of this Mrs. Elsa Ebsen said, "Extra hours have not bothered us, we are one happy family here."

Interests Are Local WPA workers at the Center stated their interests lie with the local organization, not the WPA as a national group. There is no workers' organization, spokesmen at the Center said.

Although it was stated recently that the new regulations made by congress on the WPA would have no effect on the Salem Art Center, it was found yesterday that the 30-day layoff will effect the office and teaching staff. The new ruling provides that all WPA workers who have been on the rolls 18 months will be laid off for 30 days and not re-instated unless re-certified. As all WPA workers except supervisors are certified, the entire staff with the exception of Val Clear, the director, will be effected. The ruling is effective on August 1 but no one on the staff has been on the rolls for the 18 month period.

To Alternate Jobs "When the time for layoffs comes," said Val Clear yesterday, "we will continue our present service to art students by staggering the layoffs, with no great hardships, providing re-certification of workers can be made. If not, our problem may be as important one, because finding good art instructors is no easy task."

Clear said recently that new regulations for the WPA funds would have little effect on the activities at the local Center. The scope of the Salem Art Center has been widened and now is headquarters for other centers being organized throughout the state. All exhibits will be cleared through this center which means that an enlarged staff will ultimately be necessary here.

PWA Fund Given OSC Remodeling

CORVALLIS, July 19-(P)—Approval of $9900 additional PWA funds enabled the state board of higher education to let a contract to remodel Oregon State college's old science building.

The contract submitted by the L. H. Hoffman Construction company, Portland, a month ago, was pigeon-holed at the time because the figure exceeded available funds. With the new grant the Hoffman company was granted the job, which is part of the project for remodeling the chemistry building. A total of $500,000 grant and loan was provided for the project previously.

clals of Marion county to function."

Letter to Siegmund Cities Law Provisions "Dear Judge Siegmund: My letter of July 14 in which you concur in the request of Circuit Judge McMahon for the designation of a special prosecutor to direct the grand jury in investigating the handling of county business by the Marion county court."

"In your letter you also urge that the prosecutor be instructed to investigate the conduct of the circuit judge of department No. 1 (McMahon) and cite as reasons for such request the fact that said circuit judge has repeatedly over a term of years made charges against public officials of Marion county and then failed to follow them up with any action attempting to prove them."

"The initial request of Judge McMahon for appointment of a special prosecutor, in which you concur, will be responded to by me in a letter to Judge McMahon.

"As to the request which you initiate, that I direct the special prosecutor if appointed, to investigate the conduct of Judge McMahon, I find no adequate grounds for honoring it. You make no charges of malfeasance on the part of the judge in the conduct of his own office, but complain because of charges he makes against certain officials. Such behavior, in my opinion, is his charge, not your complaints because of his charges, which may merit inquiry. In case a state judicial officer is chargeable with malfeasance in office, proceedings against him should be by the method of impeachment and trial as provided by the constitution and laws of the state.

"While I can understand the irritation which you may feel because of these charges, you have other recourses such as civil action or resort to the test of public decision at the polls if you regard such charges as false and slanderous. Certainly it is not incumbent on the state of Oregon to expend its money in arbitrating a pot-kettle feud in Marion county."

Samples of Seeds Are Being Tested

Samples of English rye grass seed, now harvested and re-cleaned, were drawn from several lots in storage at Woodburn Monday by County Agriculture Agent Harry L. Riches and sent to the state seed laboratory at Corvallis for purity and fluorescence tests.

Tests will determine if the seeds are eligible for certification. Certified seeds may be sold at a small premium over the ordinary grade seed. Several hundred acres in the county is used to grow the rye grass. Results of the tests will be known in about a week.

Field inspections were made by Mr. Riches Tuesday in connection with certification of ladino clover near Gervais and Talbot. After it has been harvested this seed also will be sent to the Corvallis station for testing.

Oddities in the News

CHICAGO, July 19-(P)—That

86-year-old grandpa, William C. Bailey, of Underhill, Vt., who just can't stay off a bicycle—since he learned to ride one seven years ago—was in town again today.

He arrived at the home of his granddaughter, Mrs. Ralph Griswold, yesterday after pedaling his way here from his home town, a distance of 1028 miles. It took him 20 days. This is a repeat performance, for he did it two years ago.

He related that he kept calling for a bicycle in his delirium when very sick seven years ago. To humor him his nurse got one for him.

"Don't know why I wanted one of the things," he said. "I never had ridden one. But there I was. When I got well I started riding. I've never felt so well in my life as I have since."

He estimated he had ridden 17,000 miles—so what's a 1000-mile return trip to Vermont? "Nothing at all," he said.

MONTEZUMA, Ga., July 19-(P)—George Chastain, ice plant manager, dusted off a few chairs and got ready for his usual refrigerating chamber guests.

They came in, one by one, sneezing a greeting to their host. The sneezes were noticeably lacking when they bade him farewell.

A few minutes rest in a meat refrigerating chamber, Chastain said, offers temporary relief to hay fever sufferers. The victims never stay "on ice" more than eight minutes if new patients, nor more than 15 minutes, if they've taken the treatment previously.

WASHINGTON, July 19-(P)—Government scientists discovered a mystery ship today at the bottom of the ocean eight miles off Brigantine inlet on the New Jersey coast.

The vessel's location did not fit into any recent unsolved mystery of the sea. It was discovered by the crew of the Oceanographer, a survey ship of the coast and geodetic survey which was dragging for undersea menaces to ships.

The wreck was found in about 60 feet of water and the highest part of it was about 35 feet below the surface. Experts said the wreck might endanger large ocean going ships and would have to be broken up.
