Maybe we in Salem do get ar occasional whiff of the papermill or are choked a speck by forest fires once a year, but there are lots worse happenings in well regulated modern cities than these. At least we never have to worry about poison gas.

They are putting pretty gas masks on British babies now, says a press dispatch, the home office wants junior to get used to them. So mothers of England will be giving pretty little red or green gas masks to the children for birthday gifts, so there will be no fear of wearing them if the time comes when this civilized world of ours indulges in war.
