While all good housewives

take pride in the snowy sheets, shirts, and handkerchiefs hanging on the washline, long custom, has made the work of washing them common-place. But the successful washing of such household furnishings as rugs, draperies, and wall coverings is still recent enough in the annals of domestic science to leave women bursting with a sense of accomplishment.

Today we may sit on washable chairs, walk on washable rugs, decorate our walls with washable papers and paint, and adorn our rooms with washable cushions. Venetian blinds, and window drapes. Even our lampshades may be the kind that take kindly to soap and water. In fact, the more often we wash our household possessions the better, for dirt disfigures any surface and sooner or later undermines its strength. Many washable furnishings cannot be put into the tub or washer, either because of their size or bulk or because it is best to keep them as nearly dry as possible, For such things household econoforming. Have three egg yolks mists have evolved soap jelly, a well beaten, and when syrup is practically dry preparation made by dissolving shaved bar soap, packaged soap, or soap scraps in boiling water and letting the mixture stand until it jells.

All fibers are washable in their natural state-lamb's wool, flax, raw silk, cotton, and the basic threads that go into the manufacture of synthetics. Now that fast dyes are in general use, the manufactured products continue to be washable. Reliable soaps and scientific washing methods practically insure successful home or commercial washing and make the soap and water system of dirt removal the most convenient and economical.

If wall washing is in order a good supply of soap jelly will come in handy. Whip into suds, sponge onto a portion of the wall, and wipe off with a clean cloth wrung out of tepid water. The soaping and rinsing are then repeated on the next adjacent section, care being taken to have the wet edges of each section overlap.

The only necessary precaution is to change the cloths and the ing often. Clean equipment is always essential for clean results.
