Court Street Job Looks to Future

Sewage Disposal Plant Is Planned for in Work now Being Done

City Engineer J. H. Davis yesterday outlined three reasons for the construction of the sewer now being laid down Court street from Church street to the alley a half block west of Front street.

More adequate sewage facilities for the downtown district, possible installation of a sewage treatment and disposal plant some time in the future on which the present line would have a bearing, and improved drainage of downtown streets by converting the present sanitary sewer facilities into a storm sewer.

Lateral sewers in intersecting alleys will be connected with the new line as it is laid, and a new alley line is planned for the future between High and Church street. The new sewer will empty into the Church street line along a down-hill gradient from Commercial street. The Church street line itself was installed several years ago when the city acquired a site for a disposal plant northwest of town.

City Ordinance Codes Printed

Simplified Listing of Laws Available now; Index Aid to Reference

Copies of Salem's new codified city ordinances are now being mimeographed by the League of Oregon Cities staff representatives with whose cooperation the simplified listing of city enactments was prepared. It was announced at Recorder A. Warren Jones' office yesterday.

Elaborately indexed and bound, the originals of the city code, including the charter, are now in use at the recorder's office. The code is divided into two volumes, one listing inactive ordinances such as those making assessments for street improvements, and the other containing active ordinances such as the traffic and building codes.

During the course of compilation of the new general code, 561 of the 3415 ordinances that had been enacted by the city were repealed and 14 new ordinances drafted. Two hundred seventy-nine of the original ordinances had been specifically repealed before the codification task was begun.

Of Reference Value
The new code contains 120 active and 2354 inactive ordinances, the latter considered of value for reference. The active ordinances include nine on general administration, three on elections, four on finance, three on municipal court, 15 on police department and police regulations, five on fire department and fire regulations, six on health officer and health regulations, 10 on nuisances, 17 on business and trade licenses and regulations, 11 on building regulations and codes, three on planning and zoning, 13 on franchises, three on parks, public works and municipal utilities, 18 on streets, sidewalks, sewers and water ways.

The codification was a part of the product of a statewide WPA project directed by the bureau of research of the University of Oregon.

Japan in bad Jam Traveler Asserts

Credentials Great Aid in Visiting Orient Avers John J. Landsbury

Japan has gotten itself into a "terrible jam," according to Dr. John J. Landsbury of Eugene, who addressed the Salem Rotary club Wednesday noon. Speaking as a sincere friend of both Japan and China, he compared Japan's invasion to the act of trampling upon a bed of quicksand.

Dr. Landsbury gave unstinted praise to the hospitality of the Japanese people, but advised persons planning to travel there to obtain all possible credentials, including a letter from the governor "complete with seals and ribbon," and to call upon the Japanese consul in Portland before leaving. The precautions will not only make travel pleasant but will bring more material benefits, he asserted.

Discussing travel in general, Dr. Landsbury said the proper viewpoint is that of seeking mutual understanding with the peoples of other lands, that the traveler may become "a part of more than his own locality." In this connection he should remember that while abroad he is the "custodian of his own country's good name."
