Don't Look now . . .

but . . . where did all the youngsters come from? Suddenly, in a town with average population, school doors are opened and—whoops! there are school children galore. They fill the streets, serpentine until midnight, eat ice cream cones on every corner. We like it.

Ho hum . . . just because we haven't gone to the fair we'll pretend it's a bore. Those we envy for the week: Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Elliott who leave soon for a visit south and Mrs. Frank Snedecor who motored down early this week and Mr. and Mrs. Ward Davis.

Three of a kind . . . Mrs. Vernon Hockett and Mrs. Al Adolphson are giving three parties this week. Each is a bridge luncheon at the Adolphson home and there are to be five tables each day.

Upsa daisy . . . there's a direct ratio between sock and skirt lengths. We'd begun to worry a bit until knee-length socks appeared on some of the smartest legs on the campus, and all fears were quelled. Brain twister though it may be, it takes better looking legs to wear socks that cover them to the knee than to wear those that don't cover them at all.

School ma'am . . . Margaret Hauser likes Washington state, and left on Wednesday to attend Western Washington college of education at Bellingham. She is a graduate of Willamette university.

Something old . . . the rose point lace on Miss Josephine Barr's wedding veil was fashioned by the same Irish lacemaker who made that on Queen Mary's. The designer gave it to a friend, who in turn presented it to Mrs. Barr's aunt. It has been kept in a safe deposit vault for many years.

Local girl . . . on her way to make good in the big city is Flavia Downs, who graduated from Pomona college this June and is continuing her music studies in the east. En route to New York she stopped in Chicago to visit her mother's cousin, Miss Verona Stowe, who has been a guest at the Downs home here.

Check, double check . . . at the barn dance on Wednesday night hostesses wore dresses of blue and white check gingham with ribbons in their hair. Checked cloths covered tables, men even checked their coats because of summer heat.

Out of mothballs . . . come minute books, ditto best bonnets, because club season is with us. Youngsters off to school, mama can play bridge or go off to a business meeting at noon. Women of Rotary are meeting on Monday at a luncheon meeting and will hear all about "European War" from Dr. Ivan Lovell. Dance clubs: Tillicum, Monday Night and Subscription are waiting for cooler weather. Mrs. Keith Brown will be hostess to bridge players on Thursday.

California, here we come . . . Betty Simmons, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Simmons, left yesterday for Palo Alto to begin her second year at Stanford. Patsy Livesley, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Livesley, leaves tonight, also for Stanford.

It's a girl! . . . Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Eugene Tower (Marjorie Tyrone) of Portland are the parents of Margene Valerie, three days old. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon E. Tower and Mrs. J. E. Tyrone of Salem, are the proud grandparents. The Towers, junior, are leaving soon for Lewiston, Idaho, to make their home.

To warmer climes . . . Mrs. Cora E. Lippold and Miss Marie Lippold will embark on the "Empress of Japan" from Victoria, bound for Honolulu next Saturday. They'll be gone about three weeks.

Well liked . . . Mrs. Walter Snyder, wife of the new curriculum director of the school system, attended the first fall meeting of the Lions auxiliary on Friday afternoon and reports are, she's very nice. The Snyders and their two youngsters are from La Grande.

Sisterly . . . Miss Barbara Williams is spending rush week in Eugene at the Chi Omega house. She left on Friday and will remain the week.

Ham and eggs on hoof . . . more secrets about the einlein-Armstrong-Lambeth-Ritches barn dance. R. H. Woodward brought two pigs and two chickens. Rumor has it they crashed the gates.

Art Center NOTES

An exhibit of unusual interest hung in the Salem Art center's main gallery this week, deserves special note because the work is done by a local business man and because his work is distinctly good.

Arthur Selander the artist, is chief appraiser for the state tax commission, taking up painting and drawing merely as a hobby. Those persons who feel that modern art is a bit too abstract, perhaps lacking in care, will find Selander's pictures all that they desire in careful detail and accurate depiction. His method is this: an original sketch is made out-of-doors, then in the studio he carefully completes the picture in water color, pencil or pastel.

Oregon scenes are his specialty, careful and pleasing style his accomplishment.

The Portland Art Museum claimed two of the center's students when Barbara Scott and Clifford Gleason registered for the winter. Both were awarded scholarships. This marks the last of the disbanding of the Guild class under the direction of Louis Bunce. Two other members of the Guild class, Mrs. Dorothy Douglas and Byron Randall, are in New York, carrying on their art work.

New to the center is Howard Sewell, Portland artist, who will conduct painting and drawing classes on Monday and Thursday of each week. Mr. Sewell's work includes murals in Timberline lodge and Portland and Oregon City high schools.

Wednesday's sketch class for business men is another new one at the center. Mrs. Marian Field will teach a course in flowers in design, for which she is ably fitted because of work done in paper trees and shrubs in cooperation with the University of Oregon botany department.

Frances Jensen, ceramics instructor, will teach design techniques in a beginners' class and Mrs. Elsa Ebsen will have a class in art history.

Mr. Earl Baileys will teach commercial art which includes pen and brush lettering, poster layouts, silk screen process printing and Christmas card work.

Of course the standard subjects offered at the center still include sculpture, ceramics, weaving and pre-school courses.
