Owen Tells of Convention; Oregon Has big Part in National Meet

Oregon made a creditable showing at the national convention of the American Legion in Chicago, members of Capital Post No. 9 were informed at Monday night's meeting by Jerry Owen, editor of the Oregon Legionnaire who had just returned. One of the high-lights was the address by Mayor Joe Carson of Portland, Owen mentioned; and some of the important resolutions were drafted by Neil Allen, Oregon department commander. The resolution adopted by the Oregon convention advocating severance of the legion's connection with Fidac, international veterans' organization, was accepted by the national convention, Owen added. The legion went firmly on record for neutrality but refused to be drawn into political controversy over the method of maintaining it. Owen reported that the Chicago convention was highly satisfactory from nearly every standpoint. Commend Guard Drive

O. E. "Mose" Palmateer, past department commander, reported on the legion's past in cooperating with the national guard in it recent recruiting program in which Oregon went "over the top' first among the states, and com mended Post Commander Art Johnson on his part in the sucessful local campaign.
